NOTES OF TRAVEL.

DENVER, Wednesday, Sept. 6, 1871.

If the "wild-berry wine" of my enthusiasm for these to me strange scenes, does not palate on the taste of your readers, I would like to continue the account of our little mountain tour.

We left Cañon about midday, and reached Caribou before sunset—driving leisurely up and down—mostly up—excellent roads—and feasting our eyes all the way on beauty and sublimity. After rounding successive point after mountain point, and passing several thriving mining settlements, we came, almost unawares, upon Caribou. This wild young city to the utter opposite to Central. Things nine thousand feet above the level of the sea, it is in a broad, deep bowl-like valley, green and beautiful. Young as to its entirely a year old—there are evidences here of prevailing ideas of comfort and taste. It is compact, neat and home-like. The stately evergreens with which this region abounds have not all been ruthlessly sacrificed. Beside almost every miner's cabin stands a tall pine, like a sentinel, and all the way up the valley on the ground not built over, are lovely clumps of these steadfast comforters of a wintry climate, and a "weary land." The whole place looked to me marvellously cheerful, as, unbowered in unchanging green, it smiled back a brave answer to the threatening glare of the eternal snows, a little way over above.

Still, to me, personally, there was a dreary sense of wildness and strangeness here. I knew not one of those brave miners, of those heroic women, who had set up their tabernacles here in the wilderness, just under the clouds and the snow. I could not think that a soul in all that busy community would have any interest in me. But when we stopped at the pleasant Planter's House, and the landlady, a bright, cheery, cordial-looking woman, came out to meet us, and said, "I am glad to see you," and spoke of having long-ago read things which I supposed were long ago forgotten by all the world, and which I had tried to forget, I was strangely touched and cheered.

That evening we sat down to supper with a goodly company of "honest miners,"—men in rough clothes and heavy boots—with hard hands and with faces well bronzed, but strong, earnest, intelligent, and mostly with the quiet manner and unconscious dignity of true gentlemen. It was to me a communion with the bravest humanity of the age—the vanguard of civilization and honorable enterprise. I believe that Caribou is remarkable, even in this wonderful country and time, for the orderly, moral and intelligent character of its people. Born after the evil reign of excitement and reckless speculation was past, gaining life here is sober and laborious and law-abiding—we, at least, saw no gambling, no drunkenness, no rudeness, no idleness.

A New-England village, resting under the bodkin shadows of the school-house, an orthodox church, and the County Jail, could not present a more quiet and decorous aspect. At night, we fell asleep amid utter stillness and peace, and should have slept on till morning, but for the welcome disturbance of sweet music—really delightful serenade. We were almost as much charmed and bewildered by these exquisite strains of the violin and guitar, which seemed to us to come out of the moonlight and the soft night-winds, as was Prince Ferdinand, by Ariel's music, in the wild air of the enchanted island. And yet it was in perfect harmony with the scene. It seemed like the chime of mountain-streams, the solemn shadows of pines, the absence of glaring mists, and the purity of cool air—"sparkling to the moon"—all translated into sound. In the morning, escorted by a gallant young miner, who was all our hearts by previous courtesy, we set out for a toilsome climb up the mountain, to visit the great Caribou Mine. The ore of this new Eldorado lode is exceedingly rich and practically inexhaustible. It was proposed that I should descend into this mine by the shaft, which is now sunk more than 300 feet, but my enthusiasm was soon damped by proving the moist and muddy condition of the ore as it came up. So I went further up the mountain to a moderately deep and dry mine, which I bravely descended in a bucket, and with my own hand chipped off a bit of silver ore which I expect my posterity will piously preserve. It is all of that sort of thing they are likely to receive from me.

We then ascended the highest point in that immediate region, which was thereupon named after the one of the party least deserving of an honor, which should, I think, be conferred only on an actual settler. Nevertheless, I hereby warn all miners against prospecting, or other wise trespassing on my knob.

On this last ascent we were piloted by Ulysses Frank, an old pioneer, bear and elk hunter, and miner, of course, and he said we must see SAMUEL COOPER, the hero of Gouge Mountain—one of the discoverers of the Caribou lode, practical miner and Ex-Indian fighter. So we went to the shaft, in which so is now working, and SAMUEL was evoked, and came up like SAMUEL of old, only M. C. 1860 head over hand. Then we all sat down on the timbers by the mine, and the boys cut the whetstone and stood by, and—but how can I describe the scene? The sunny slope of the mountain, all grassy and flowery, the murmuring pines and whispering aspens about us, the lovely valley below, the grand heights above, the deep cañon of the North Boulder at our right, glistening snows to our left, and underneath us alive enough to furnish tea-sets for every family in New-England, and pet-bowls for all the babies. And, the day—just warm enough, just cool enough; balmy, beautiful, benignant, perfect—one of God's own days. So, to sit there idling on that ascending log, and listen to hunting and mining adventures and Indian stories, which were the real thing, and no make-believes, from SAMUEL and Ulysses, all that was "richness!" We parted dryads these two at last as from old friends, and they went back into their mines, from which may they come so some day rich as eastern nabobs and twice as jolly.

One greasy mule drive to Boulder City, over grand heights, through lovely little parks, and wild pine forests, and by the newly-opened route down the North Boulder Cañon, then strolled me with wonder and delight, and now fills me with despair. I know it is utterly indescribable. I have seen nothing in America that has so impressed and enchanted me. All the way, height and depth, and the immensity of mountain and sky—sheer grassie walls, and massive, castle-like rocks, are softened, and shaded, and glorified by beauty incomparable—by azure, bright, gurgling waters and silver cascades, and by luxuriant foliage of every imaginable shade of green, touched here and there by scarlet and gold and flame of ruddy brown, while every shadowy place is illuminated with flowers.

Boulder is a remarkably pretty town, exquisitely situated, just under the foot-hills, looking out on the prairie. It is well watered, and is in the midst of an agricultural region of great capabilities. The buttes—sharp, bare, rocky elevations, a mile or so to the left of the town—make a striking and picturesque feature of the landscape. On the sharpest of these, I was told, the Arapahoes once "corraled" a band of Utes, and kept them there several days. When the besiegers undertook to storm the heights, which their arrows would not reach, the Utes rolled down rocks, and so kept them at bay till relief came.

By the way, I met at Boulder, and freely conversed with several old Indian fighters—men to whose hardy valor and more than Roman firmness, hundreds of the citizens of Colorado today owe their safety, and the safety of their property. These frankly acknowledge that they were in the terrible battle known to us as the "Sand Creek Massacre,"—and after hearing their several simple, straight-forward statements, agreeing in every essential point, I should, had I been doubtful before, have been convinced that there were two sides to that dark and dreadful story.

I fully believe that these men felt driven by an awful, imperative necessity, when, after having been almost starved in their mountain camps by Indian depredations, and the cutting off of supplies—after coming upon the bodies of whole families of their friends and neighbors, literally chopped to pieces—after having bodies of murdered women and children shown in the market-places of their towns, with wounds more eloquent than those of CESAR's after despairing of efficient Government did they undertook that long Winter march, surprised that treacherous Indian camp, and made short, sharp work in dealing with its inmates. If the slaughter was indiscriminate, still, I doubt not, they were actuated by as stern a sense of duty as ever impelled to deeds of vengeance and extermination our pious Puritan sires, whose valiant deeds we glorify every Forefathers' Day.

Still, I will add that these Sand Creek men, so frank, so manly, and withal so gentle now, were guilty of some excesses on that occasion. They fired alike on the squaws, who stood and fought, and the braves, who ran away—and they pillaged as well as slaughtered—for it has not been denied that they took from the wigwams of these "friendly Indians," peacefully camped "under the protection of Fort Lyon," stores by sutler and sugar, goods and bills of lading just captured with trouble and peril from trains on their route, and took also greenbacks and boxes of boots and shoes, and clothing of all sorts, only a little the worse for wear and blood, and precious relics, scalps of white women and children, not yet dry. One soldier confessed that he brought away a delicate pair of shoes, a woman's shoes, which looked, he said, as though they had been filled with blood. Another soldier, Capt. ANDERSON, has ever since preserved as a memento, but has now given to me, a dainty painted shield, which he took from a chief's brave, and which should have been tenderly buried with him, for it was doubtless a precious possession to the young man, being tasted with many eagle feathers, and specially decorated with a large lock of fine, soft, brown hair, evidently that of a young white girl. But really now, my dear Sir, if those gory shoes had belonged to your mother or mine, and if that beautiful hair had been torn from the head of your dear daughter or mine, and we had not been prejudiced in favor of the Indians, we should, perhaps, have thought that chastisement of retaliation and protection, somewhat severe, were about that time justifiable. In our human weakness, we might have said: The swifter, the sterner, the more terrible and thorough the punishment for such deeds the better. We might at any day be less hard in our judgment on the desperate men pointed out as "the savage leaders" in that massacre, and less inclined to pen savage "leaders" against the poor harassed settlers of Texas and Arizona. All through our beautiful drive back to Denver, over those soft rising swells of the prairie which merge into the billowy foot-hills, out of which tower the mighty granite waves of the great range—through all those smiling, peaceful scenes, I carried that barbaric shield, a hideous memento of a time of terror and blood, and only a little way back in the past. Every now and then those soft, girlish locks were blown against my hand, and always the touch sent to my heart a thrill of wondering pity. Poor child! "Who was her father? Who was her mother?"

That night the strange trophy was in my chamber, and I could not sleep. I seemed to be alternately haunted by the murdered girl, who was the original owner of the scalp, and by the bereaved brave, to whom it had belonged, by right of conquest.

Capt. AIKENS, of Boulder, a hardy, handsome old pioneer, told me some interesting Indian stories, which I regret that I have not room for here. One of his peculiar expressions amused me. Describing the astonishment of an Arapahoe Chief who came to warn him away from his mine, and whom he in turn threatened and defied, he said: "Why, you could have lariated his eyes."

Another miner, while gazing on a friend whom he found after an Indian raid, lying by his cabin dead, scalped, and stuck as full of arrows as a St. Sebastian, said, mournfully: "Poor fellow he has gone over the range."

Another, on seeing a bald-headed stranger approaching the camp, exclaimed: "Here boys comes a man with his head above timber line."

CHICAGO.

New Movements for Municipal Reform—Results of the Republican Convention—Local Improvements, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Saturday, Sept. 16, 1871.

The Republican County Convention was held this afternoon for the appointment of delegates to the State Convention. There was but little interest manifested, and not over one thousand votes were polled at the primary meetings which elected the delegates to this Convention. In most of the wards less than fifty attended the polls, so that our fifty-five delegates to Springfield actually represent about one twenty-fifth of the Republican voters of Cook County. No instructions were given as to the choice of the Convention for Congressman at large, the only officer nominated, but the delegates go down, I suppose, to make the best possible bargain, Chicago fashion.

There is a quiet movement on foot, in the hands of some leading business men, lawyers, &c., in the city politics, to bring out a ticket which shall represent the element of our society which is opposed to the saloon rule, to the repeal of the Sunday laws, and generally to the systematic effort which is making to break down our religious institutions and observances. To make the issue distinct and emphatic, it is proposed to run some representative man for Mayor. Rev. Dr. EVARTS, pastor of the First Baptist Church, who has always been outspoken on the questions involved, Dr. N. S. DAVIS, (Methodist,) a distinguished and able advocate of the temperance reform, and one of our ablest and most popular physicians, and Col. C. G. HAMMOND, (Congregationalist,) late Superintendent of the Pacific Railroad, and one of our best men, are most talked of for Mayor, and one of the three will undoubtedly head the ticket.

The temperance men are taking the lead in the movement, and have been holding meetings for the past two months, with a view of waking up public sentiment. But it will be a general uprising of the better classes against the rule of the saloons and German infidelity.

EPISCOPALIAN AND OTHER CONVENTIONS.

The Episcopal Diocesan Convention of Illinois has been held in this city during the present week. Episcopacy is not a very formidable institution in this State, although it makes a considerable noise in the world, there being only forty-five parishes represented. The principal business done was the taking of measures to organ ize Mr. CHEBNEY. A canon was adopted making it a cause for suspension for a minister to resort to the civil Courts in defense of his rights, while in the same breath the Convention resolved to go to law with the vestrymen and wardens of Christ's Church. It was also resolved to divide the State into three dioceses. This is a good deal like making three bites at a cherry, as, from the best accounts I have, there are only about ten thousand communicants in the entire State, fully a third of these being in Chicago.

The Grand Lodge of North American I. O. of O. F., meets in this city on Monday. Extensive arrangements have been made by the resident members of the Order for their reception and entertainment. They are to issue a daily journal of the proceedings from the Lakeside press, during the session. The Grand Lodge of the State will be here to welcome the national body.

The Grand Lodge of I. O. of G. T., of this State, has just closed its annual session at Pana. The attendance was quite large, and the Order is in a somewhat better condition financially and numerically, than last year. But the Order has certously declined during the past four years—the membership having decreased, according to the official reports, from 50,000 to less than 15,000.

CITY MATTERS.

The Prosecuting Attorney of this City has commenced quite a number of suits against elevator and warehouse men for a violation of the new law regulating their business. This violation has been systematic and general for the purpose of bringing the question to an issue before the Courts. Should it be decided to be constitutional it will be quite a serious business for the violators, as the penalty is, we believe, $500 per day since the law went into effect—the 1st of July.

The Mayor and Inspectors of our new Bridewell have tendered the Superintendency of the institution to Mr. BROCKWAY, of Detroit, who is regarded the best man for the place in the country. His administration of the affairs of a similar institution in Detroit has been eminently successful every way. The management of our old Bridewell has been simply a disgrace to the city and to humanity, while it has involved the city in an annual expense of about fifty thousand dollars. And as the product of our twenty-three hundred saloons we can fill a city prison of almost any size with vagrants and criminals, it is important that there be a man at the head of it who can properly manage it.

The Government officers made an official visit to South Chicago, otherwise Calumet, a day or two ago. They found the works which are being constructed out of the appropriations of Congress progressing satisfactorily. The first fifty thousand dollars have been expended, and the harbor is rapidly becoming one of the best on Lake Michigan. A heavy business will be done here in a few years in lumber, and it ought to be made the head-quarters of all the rough business of this point.

Business is active in nearly every department, and a satisfactory Fall trade is going forward. Money is easy, though currency is not quite as plenty as it was a month or two ago.

MILLERITE CAMP-MEETING.

Beautiful Situation on Lake Winnisimmet—Description of the Camp—Interesting Facts Concerning the Sect.

From Our Own Correspondent.

GREENLAND, N. H., Saturday, Sept. 16, 1871.

Camp-meetings being the current sensation in this, the leisure season of New-England country life, I went, day before yesterday, to see the annual camp-meeting of the Church of the Second Advent, or "Millerites," as they are sometimes termed by unsympathetic unbelievers, which is being held at Alton Bay, beginning on the 8th of September, and to continue until Monday next. The trip thither, by the Boston and Maine Railroad, brought to my notice the usual incidents of railroad excursions; the wild rush and confusion of eager and impatient passengers, thrust, stuffed and jammed into overcrowded cars, all ages and sexes mingling in a general pell-mell—the old story, which a patient public endures from year to year without even a murmur, until some Revere disaster makes a momentary spasmodic clamor, only to die out and be forgotten with the same suddenness. After a long ride the train rolled into a capacious depot. Descending from the cars to the platform, we found ourselves on the very edge of Alton Bay, which forms the south-eastern extremity of Lake Winnipiseogee. In default of a more definite purpose I adopted BEECHER's rule, and "followed the crowd." It led me several hundred yards along the shore of the bay, where another crowd formed at the edge of the water and became stationary. Fifteen minutes of waiting, stretching of necks, and tip-toeing, developed the cause of the gathering. It was noon; the forenoon services at the camp were over, and the fruits of the successful morning ministrations were to be reaped in the baptism of seven converts. After some hymns and a prayer, three ministers of the same time led each a convert down a sloping beach into the clear water of the bay, and administered the rite of immersion, one after another. There was much etching of breath on the part of the converts, for there was a cool north breeze. There was some rather tame and rather forced shouting by the preachers who were administering the rite. Again three more were led into the water, and after these the seventh, being a curly-headed little girl, who could scarcely have entered her teens.

The baptisms over, the crowd dispersed toward the camp, which lay perched up on the side of rather an abrupt hill. From the water's side only a ragged edge of it could be seen. Had it been in any of the Western Territories, I should have thought it a cluster of shanties belonging to a party of prospecting miners. Following a winding path, however, which led up a sharp activity, and threading our way through an intricate mass of little board structures, we were soon in the middle of the camp at the grand stand. Outside the cluster of shanties was a fringe of cloth tents; outside these, an apparently hopeless tangle of horses and vehicles. The camp is not spread over a large area, but it is densely packed, and the smoke of diminutive stoves, the squalls of omnipresent children, and the clatter of dishes give it an intensely practical appearance. These are no holiday campers; they have come to stay the full ten days.

As I have said, it was dinner hour; the auditorium was deserted, and the sunlight flickered through the foliage on empty benches. But the dispersed audience was not far off. Cornering with the preaching place was an irregular open space, some what triangular in shape, surrounded by rather a better class of board structures. This was the public square of the camp, lively and gay with loungers and promenaders, and reminded one irresistibly of some of those sunny and cheery little market-places in Alpine villages. This, too, was sunny and cheery; everybody who was not dining was here assembled, walking lounging, listening, the ever-changing groups, and the ever-varying colors of feminine apparel making it an exceedingly pretty little vanity fair. In one place an ambitious country quartet-club was treating an admiring circle of listeners to choice bits of harmony from Jan "advent" music-book, the first tenor obligingly informing their hearers between the pieces that all this beautiful music could be had for the trifling sum of thirty-five cents. At another place a blind preacher of the faith made his appearance, and was immediately surrounded, embraced and kissed by his enthusiastic disciples, some of whom were of very tender years, and to whose embracements he made the pathetic answer that "he always liked to see little girls." Here, too, I learned from the free and unstinted conversation on all sides that by our tardy arrival we had missed the gem of the day's proceedings—a sermon from a lady preacher during the morning hours. Mrs. D. R. MANSFIELD, of Buchanan, Mich., was the heroine of this discourse, which elicited praise from all lips. One enthusiastic sister made the gushing comment: "Oh, I tell you it was a real feast: it was the most beautiful sermon we have had during the entire meeting."

Toward 2 o'clock a very hoarse bell announced the beginning of the afternoon services, and the crowd moved en masse, and very promptly, to the seats around the grand stand. The blind preacher made a fervent prayer, to which fervent responses came from the audience; after which the presiding elder, with much business directness, announced that he wanted to raise the sum of $400, and hats were duly passed around. While this proceeded I had a good chance to study the faces of the crowd. It was a good, solid country audience, well-dressed, orderly, thoughtful, and evidently very earnest. The prevailing style of dress was that of plain farming people, there being no striking or noticeable efflorescence of puffy City fashions. Still here and there in the sea of heads, and among the row of preachers on the grand stand, and especially among the brethren appointed to circulate the hats, were striking, characteristic faces, belonging unmistakably to the genus visionary.

The collection being over—the success or failure of which was not announced—one of the leaders of the sect—a long-bearded, solemn-faced, deliberate-worded pulpit Pawhan, took a text and began a formidable two hours' sermon on doctrine. As it elicited no special interest or sensation, I strolled back to the plaza, where a considerable number of loungers and promenaders had again gathered. On one side of the plaza was an open booth, placarded with the portentous sign, in black, staring capitals, "The World's Crisis Office." Thither I bent my steps, and learned that it was not an office where front seats might be secured to witness the grand terrestrial collapse, but where the faithful or inquiring might subscribe for the Church newspaper, and where pamphlets, tracts and books were sold. By means of such "Advent" literature as I found here, and through the courteous replies of one of the editorial staff, I picked up such information as I could about the sect.

As to actual numbers, my informant could not venture a guess. They were scattered all over New-England, in several parts of which they hold annual camp meetings. The organization also extends out to Michigan, and other points in the North-west. Current preaching is advertised in some 150 different places in New-England. Massachusetts has the most members. Boston, Lynn, Lowell and Lawrence seem to be centres of the faith; but on the ground are large tents marked Portland, Kennebunk, Concord, White Mountain, Great Falls, and many other points. The Crisis is only one of eight or ten journals devoted to the spread of their doctrines. It is a good-sized weekly, which alone circulates nearly 10,000 copies. The association which controls it has during the past year received and expended about $21,000 in this and other religious printed matter. In this paper I find the peculiar tenets of the Church thus summarized:

"The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth, especially to the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked."

This number of the paper indulges in much explanation of the prophecies, in some denunciation of DARWIN, and in a very decided reaffirmation of the Mosaic account of the creation. Occasionally it strikes out in a good bit of practical theology, like the following:

"We do not find anything in the Bible that leads us to believe that God causes a man to get drunk, fall out of his wagon, and break his neck, or commit suicide; or to abuse his stomach and bring on dyspepsia, thus causing premature death. He has established certain laws of health; and if we violate them, we must suffer the consequences. When a mother dressed her child with bare neck and limbs, causing it to take cold and die, it is the mother's doings that killed the child, and not the Lord's."

The repeated failures of MILLER and his followers, in having the earth destroyed on a stated day and hour, has, I infer, made the faithful much more cautious in their predictions of late years. There is still a faction in the fold of those who are called "Time-ists," some of whom scorn the daily affairs of life, and literally or metaphorically busy themselves only with the preparation of their ascension robes. I must not forget to mention in this connection that, in what appeared to be a large reception tent near the depot, I saw suspended a most curious, cabalistic looking chart, having painted on it in strongly contrasted colors, winged lions and horned lions, rams and seats, stars and crosses, and a seven headed dragon in bright red, all interspersed with the words, Babylon, Grecia, Medo-Persia and other names of ancient history, together with many numbers, scripture quotations and chronological fragments—the whole having evidently been the pet work of some zealous "time-ist." From all I could learn, however, the great majority of the "Advent-ists" content themselves with the general assertion that the time for the second appearance of Christ is at hand, without attempting to specify its exact date. In anticipation of this great event they are planning, preaching and organizing after their fashion, and having, so far as they could, hitched the railroad and printing-press to their creed, they seem to be at least making themselves a permanent and considerable place among the sects of our day, in this part of the Union.

THE COTTON CROP.

Immense Damage Sustained in Georgia by the Rains—A Few Facts for Consideration—The Recent Freshets Destroying Bridges and Roads—Dull Business.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MACON, Ga., Monday, Sept. 18, 1871.

I have just returned from a visit to several of the counties of Middle Georgia. I went with a view to ascertain for myself the true condition of the crops, and see whether or not the damage done by the recent rains was as great as was represented. For once report has not exaggerated fact. The misery has been immense, and is now beyond remedy. Most of the cotton that was open when the rains commenced, was washed out of the bolls, and beaten into the earth by the continuous rains, and that small portion of it which has been picked up, is so stained and full of trash and dirt, that it must rate as of very inferior quality. Large quantities of cotton have suffered in this way. Up to Saturday last, since the deluge of Tuesday and Wednesday, the 6th and 6th, the down-pour has been almost incessant, so that it has been impossible to save much of the washed cotton, and that which remained in the bolls, instead of opening has begun to rot and sprout in the bolls. From every portion of the State, I receive information of similar disaster, and I am satisfied from what I have seen myself that my information states the truth. If this be so, I am of opinion that the cotton crop of Georgia will not be half what it was last year. Late and cold Spring for planting, protracted rains preventing proper cultivation, rust and the caterpillars had already reduced the yield far below an average crop; but the cataclysm of last week crowned the work of destruction. Even the speculator in "futures," whose faith in a crop not "far below the figures of '70-'71" was so emphatically and repeatedly announced on all occasions, has given way before the deluge. The most sanguine of these men now believe that 3,500,000 bales are all that we can expect. They look very gloomy, are restless and uneasy, and consult the probabilities of the signal-office with painful anxiety, hoping to find that fair weather may be predicted. To give an idea of the extent of the damage from the storm, the manager of the large cotton plantations of Messrs. JORDAN & LOCKETT, in South-western Georgia, telegraphed those gentlemen that the rain of Tuesday and Wednesday had, at the most moderate calculation, destroyed three hundred bales. Another large planter told me that, on land which last year produced a bale to the acre, he will not gather a bale this year on six acres. Another intelligent planter in Monroe County told me on Friday that the cotton was beginning to sprout in the bolls, and that he regarded the crop in some of his fields as almost a total failure. It is raining again as I write, and all the indications of the sky and atmosphere are against clear weather. If we could have just such weather as we could desire from now until November we might yet count on half an average crop, but if this rainy weather continues it is impossible to predict the extent of the loss, unless it be set down as total failure. I am not a croaker, I have not speculated in one bale, nor do I intend to do so. I have no sympathy with either the bulls or the bears. I state what I believe, and I am confident that I state the truth. If other localities are as badly off as Georgia, and if they are similarly situated as to area planted, and injury from late Spring and unpropitious season, I do not see how we can reasonably expect the total crop to exceed two and a half million of bales.

The new crop is coming in very slowly as compared with former years. This is attributable in part to the small amount that has been gathered, and also to the serious injury to the roads and bridges by the recent freshets. On one of the principal roads leading to this place all the bridges have been washed away, so that it is entirely impassable, and on another the damage has been very serious. One of the railroads leading here has been closed to all travel for ten days, and several days must elapse before it can be opened again to traffic.

All this tends to depress business and make the Fall trade open unpromisingly. Ordinarily at this time trade is active, money more abundant, and prospects bright; but now things are as dull as in Midsummer, money is almost unattainable, and the outlook as dark as a wolf's mouth. Two per cent a month on deposit on first-rate collaterals is the price of money to the best men. What business that is not speculative can stand these rates and thrive?

The planters will pay off their indebtedness of last year as soon as they can gather cotton enough and raise the amount, and when this is done, money will be somewhat easier, but at this moment, the banks which have been "toting" the overdue indebtedness, are literally à sec, and ordinary accommodation is not to be had, because there is no money.

This city looks forward to a very lively time at the State Fair, which opens on the 23d of October, and continues for five days. During the entire month of October this will attract a crowd here, and there is every indication that it will be one of unusual interest. The New Fair Grounds and buildings which the city authorities of Macon have prepared at the Central Park, close to the city, are the finest I have seen at the South, both in their extent and comforts, and as to the taste of the design and skill in their execution. They are really beautiful, are within five minutes' walk from the business part of the city, and are amply provided with every convenience for visitors and exhibitors. Already notice has been received of a large number of entries, and several race-horses have already arrived, and are in training to compete for the prizes which have been offered by enterprising lovers of the turf.

There is a perfect calm in politics. Even the new departure seems to have lost its charm. The alleged embezzlement of the funds of the State Railroad, by the former officers of that public work, is creating some excitement. The developments are becoming startling, and those who profess to be posted predict a speedy arrest of many prominent officers who have hitherto escaped. The most prominent of these is Mr. FOSTER BLODGETT, the late Superintendent. Mr. A. L. HARRIS, the ex-Master of Transportation, has just been arrested, and it is said that some of the small fry who have been detected have owned up and offered to tell the whole story if they are allowed to escape. Hon. ROBERT TOOMBS is in Atlanta, engaged to assist the State in the prosecution, and I see by the papers today that Mr. B. H. HILL has also been retained for the Commonwealth. Apart from politics or parties, there can be no doubt whatever that large sums of public money have been embezzled and misapplied, but by whom is still a matter to be discovered. Rumor is busy as usual. Several persons are suspected, but nothing has yet appeared to fix the guilt of any but two or three petty thieves.

There is a movement among the negroes of Middle Georgia with a view to emigration to Liberia. There was a large meeting in Milledgeville on last Saturday, to discuss the matter, but I failed to see any negro who was very anxious to make the trip. One of them who was told that he would receive a free passage and a gift of six months' rations, said he would be glad to have the free rations, but would like to be allowed to eat them "to hum." As long as the negroes can get plenty of flour, and bacon at 12½ cents per pound, and can get good wages, they will not migrate anywhere. They like adventure and a prospect of "nothing to do," but they love home, and will be very slow to leave it unless hard times drives them to do so.

YELLOW FEVER.

Its Appearance at Cedar Keys—Large Proportion of Deaths.

The Mobile (Ala.) Register of Sunday last gives the following statement, the result of careful inquiry, respecting the appearance of the fever in Florida:

"The population of Cedar Keys is about 300 of which number two-thirds are negroes. The place is, topographically, quite small—only a few hundred yards in circuit. Between it and the main-land there are extensive marshes, intersected by lagoons. The prevalent winds for the last four or five weeks have been from the north-east, and during that period the miasma generating the abundant malaria generated in them, over the town, and during this period malaria fevers have been quite numerous among all classes of the population. Toward the end of last week the fever seemed to have changed its type, or to have grown far more malignant, and on Thursday and Sunday there were five or six deaths. Among them we have heard of the following mentioned by name: Col. MCCORMICK, Mr. HAMILTON, and Mr. RICHARDSON. The malignant character of the fever, and the large number of deaths, caused such a panic that almost the entire white population of the place has left in dismay. Since the above was written we have been handed the following dispatch, received by the Health Officer yesterday morning:

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Sept. 18, 1871.

To Dr. Jerome Cochran, Health Officer, Mobile:

The disease prevalent at the Keys has, in my opinion, all the characteristics of yellow fever, and I so pronounce it. T. W. MCCAA, M. D.

We learn that Dr. MCCAA is a physician of high standing, who visited Cedar Keys to see Col. MCCORMICK during the illness which terminated in his death, and in this way became acquainted with the fever there."

THE FEVER IN NEW-ORLEANS.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of Thursday morning says: "We learn through a private dispatch received Wednesday by a prominent business man of this city, that the yellow fever has again visited New-Orleans, and that its virulence is equal to that of any of its preceding visitations. Hundreds, according to our informants, have been stricken down, and but a small proportion of the number attacked have recovered."

A Card From Dr. Meshaeli.

In the list of persons paid for services before the Legislature of Connecticut in 1870, published by the Hartford Post, appeared the name of HORACE BUSHNELL, as the recipient of $25 90. This fact explains the following note, addressed by Rev. Dr. BUSHNELL to the Post:

SOUTH MANCHESTER, Sept. 19, 1871.

DEAR Post.—I do not quite like to be paid, as yesterday, in your paper, in the rather sorry figure of having done twenty-five dollars and twenty cents worth of lobby service for the City of Hartford. It may be that there is some other person in the State of the name who has claimed this honor. If not, then some one has been theoring under it. Let the Treasurer of the city tell us who gave in the bill. His it been audited. Under what vouchers paid. Has it been paid at all? I wholly object to being advertised in this lobbying business. It is not to my taste. And I further object to the twenty cents put in to make the bill more probable. More seriously, the party chiefly at fault, this Court-house plastering fraud inverted, is no good sign, and should not be to the taste of any body.

The Fernie Fanelluction of Fernicious Frauds—Mr. Murray's Mills for Distributing and Passing Sections 8 of Chapter 626 of the Laws of 1871—Mr. Macgregor's Action Only "Ministerial?"—Who Bakes Baker Mails.

The constant complaints which have been made against Mr. MACGREGOR, Superintendent of Buildings, have fatefully verified the prediction that where there is much smoke there is certainly some fire. Though it may be difficult to trace the money black-mailed from the builders of tenement-houses directly to the hands of the Superintendent, yet such facts have been ascertained as will leave a moral conviction on the minds of every one that he systematically trades on the power entrusted to him by the Building law of 1871. He is a canny Scotchman, a cool, keen, resolute man, quick of eye, ready of hand, not averse to a rough-and-tumble fight if necessary, and has so impressed the persons through whom the money is made with a sense of his reliability that nothing can be extracted from them unless they were summoned to witness under oath before some legally-constituted tribunal. The power of the Superintendent lies in the peculiar construction of the Building law. Section 3 of chapter 626 of the laws of 1871 seems to have been framed for the special purpose to "ruin it in the long run" this of crushing money. It provides that tenement-houses shall be built in a certain specific fashion, with walls of a certain thickness, with roofing of a certain fashioning, and with various fire-proof, fire-escape and fire-alarm contrivances. A close and scrupulous adherence to this law would make a tenement-house considerably more expensive than a palatial mansion on Fifth-avenue. Mr. ABRAHAM PETTIT, the well-known builder, and the President of the Mechanics' and Traders' Exchange, relates the experience of a Mrs. D'OCHENE in this particular. She had two fine lots in the vicinity of West Fourth-street, and contemplated building two tenement-houses on them. Being desirous of obeying the law, she instructed a Mr. EAGLE to draw up specifications in exact accordance with the famous section 3. He did so, and the plans were presented at the Superintendent's office, on Fourth-avenue. He warmly approved of them, and pronounced them the best he had ever seen. But when the expense came to be considered it was found that these houses would cost three times as much as ordinary dwelling-houses, and as the lady was unwilling to receive an interest of only and a half per cent on her outlay, she preferred to put up two handsome brown-stone fronts.

The persons who do build tenement-houses are not always the bloated aristocrats which the world believes. They are often mechanics who have saved money, or small tradesmen, who have pinched and pinched, saving twice when they were earning once, to raise a sum sufficient to buy the lot next door to them, and then rear a fourstory, tenement-house on it. They, in nine cases out of ten, occupy one of the stores in the basement, and are kindly considerate landlords. But they are seldom men of education, and their natural shrewdness fails them when attacked in the name of the law. The builders, terror afraid of the active enmity of the Department, counsel yield submission to all demands made upon them. The process commences as soon as the plans are filed at the Superintendent's office. The builder is informed that they are in violation of section 3 of chapter 626 of the laws of 1871. He asks what he had better do about it, and is told that he had better obtain legal advice. The builder, who knows exactly what this means, goes to Mr. ROBERT MURRAY, of No. 9 Pine-street, and states his business. "I shall have to present a petition to the Supreme Court and prepare papers and make disbursements in the County Clerk's Office for filing and copying," says the lawyer. "How much?" says the builder, with a sour look. Now, the peculiarity of this thing is that though the services rendered are identical in each case, the charge seems to vary considerably. Sometimes it is $200, sometimes $250, sometimes $300. Whatever the sum is, it is paid by the builder, and the following receipt is handed over:

Received from JOHN BORNEY three hundred and fifty dollars in full for drawing papers and disbursements in regard to obtaining necessary consents to be erected upon No. 152 Monroe-street, in the City of New-York, as per plans.

ROBERT MURRAY.

In a few days the builder receives this letter, the body of which is in the hand-writing of the clerk, but the italicised portions are in the hand-writing of Mr. MURRAY, a fact which may or may not prove Mr. MACGREGOR's complicity:

DEPARTMENT OF BUILDINGS, NEW-YORK, Oct. 1, 1871.

No. 3 FOURTH-AVENUE, NEW-YORK, Oct. 1, 1871.

In the matter of the application of JOHN BORNEY, for authority to erect upon No. 152 Monroe-street, in the 17th Ward of New-York, a tenement-house, having been made to the Superintendent of Buildings to issue a certificate, allowing said house to be erected, and said order having been duly granted, and a copy of said petition and order filed in the Department, I hereby certify that the said Petitioner has permission to erect said house according to plans and specifications submitted to this Department.

Superintendent of Buildings.

The paper on which this is written is red official paper, as it ought to be, for it purports to be an order emanating from the Department, and from the fact that the blank spaces have been filled in by Mr. MURRAY, the deduction must be drawn that it has been prepared in his office. Mr. MACGREGOR will please explain why an order issued from the Department apparently, and bearing his genuine signature, should be issued from a lawyer's office in Pine-street. As his signature is genuine and the permit is always respected by his subordinates, it must be done with his knowledge. It is certainly a gross breach of official etiquette, if it is nothing else.

The fee of $250 for drawing papers and disbursements is an excellent joke. The lawyer prepares a petition to the Superintendent of Buildings of about a hundred words, generally much less, stating that JOHN BORNEY wishes to build a tenement-house of five stories. Mr. MACGREGOR's business is to see that Mr. BORNEY is compelled to do so according to section 8 of chapter 626 of the laws of 1871. The lawyer then prepares another petition of the same length to the Supreme Court praying for an order assenting to section 8, chapter 626 of the laws of 1871. He presents as many of these as he has prepared to any Justice of the Supreme Court at Chambers, then clerks, and attorneys, at whose offices they are building permits, and they are of course signed. So much for the drawing of papers which $25 would amply pay for. The disbursements are still richer. He files the petition and order and has the copy certified in the County Clerk's office, for which he pays thirty-two cents. The account then will read thus:

For drawing papers	$25 00
For disbursements	32
Total	$25 32
Amount of actual charges	25 32
Deduct legitimate	25 32
Amount of overcharge	$224 68

A reporter of the TIMES went round among the new tenement-houses and found that all the proprietors, without exception, made the same painful acquaintance of Mr. ROBERT MURRAY. He saw Mr. JAMES COSTELLO, baker, No. 42 Hamilton-street, who paid $250 to Mr. MURRAY for the permit to build a tenement-house on No. 40 Hamilton-street. He paid it in person, and considers himself swindled. It was explained to him at the time that he could proceed with the building without a permit, but that five stories necessitated the drawing of papers and disbursements. He has since paid $75 for a fire alarm, which he considers another swindle.

JOSEPH KAHN, butcher, of Pike-street, paid $250 to Mr. MURRAY for the privilege of building a tenement-house at No. 29½ Madison-street. Two years ago he paid $200 to build one at No. 49 Pike-street; but this was when the Building law was not in existence and something might be done to punish the blackmailers in this instance. This gentleman is a fine sturdy German, who votes the Republican ticket in a section belonging to the Democracy, naturally, and especially to Mr. TWEED. He has therefore been marked down, and has been made to pay blood at every pore, for the privilege of constructing vaults under the sidewalk, the Commissioner of Public Works insisted him $414, which he thinks a swindle.

STEPHEN LOVEJOY, grocer and tea merchant, of No. 42 Rutgers-street, at the corner of Madison, had the pleasure of handing his check for $ Warmth and Ventilation.

HOW TO WARM OUR HOUSES. A Treatise on Ventilation, comprising Seven Lectures delivered before the Franklin Institute, in Philadelphia. Illustrated by many plans of Heating and Lighting. By Lewis W. Leeds. 8vo, pp. 252. JOHN WILEY & SON.

The time of the year has arrived when, throughout the temperate zones, millions of fires are being lit for the comfort of the dwellers in houses. Whether by stoves, steam-heaters, hot water, or hot-air furnaces, by open fires, or by some other form of heat-producing apparatus, a majority of the readers of the TIMES are now taking measures to protect themselves against the growing cold of the season. It would seem an opportune time to give a plain account of the best practical methods for securing two great desiderata of the Fall and Winter months—warmth and fresh air combined.

1. The first of the heat-producers that we have mentioned—the cast-iron stove—is probably the one most generally employed in this country. As it is commonly employed, it does not furnish a healthy artificial heat, and the eloquence of many a writer has been expended in denouncing it. CHARLES DICKENS has particularly exercised himself in the condemnation of "that eternal, accursed, suffocating, red-hot demon of a stove, so commonly found in America." Yet, as we shall show, the stove may be so managed as to become one of the best means of warming. Bearing constantly in mind that comparatively warm air rises, while comparatively cold air falls, we may easily understand the way to make a stove do its duty properly. In a stove-heated room, that derives its only supply of air from the cracks or the partial opening of doors or windows, the cooler air goes at once to the floor, chilling the feet of the occupants as it passes toward the stove in the centre of the room; the incoming currents of air from the windows generally strike upon the sister and chill him on one side, while the other side may be half roasted by the radiation from the "red-hot demon." The warm air, on the other hand, rises toward the ceiling, and remains as an impure stratum which occupies the upper half of the room for a length of time proportionate to the closeness with which the doors and windows are kept shut. As there is seldom any systematic provision made for changing the air in the room, it thus becomes laden with carbonic acid from the breath of its occupants; while the occurrence of a slight draught of cold air, falling directly upon limited portions of the body, proves a fertile source of rheumatism and of colds. For one can endure a general draught, blowing full in the face, when a local draught will be highly injurious. The ordinary arrangement of a stove-heated room is, in short, about the worst possible arrangement.

Now let us describe a more rational plan. Suppose a tin pipe of three or four inches diameter for an office or sitting-room of ordinary size to be let into the top of a window or through the side of the house, carried across the ceiling to a point nearly over the top of the stove, and freely admitting fresh air from without. Suppose an opening or register to be placed at the level of the floor for the escape of the impure air, and the rest of the room as tightly closed as may be required to prevent local draughts. Owing to its greater weight, the pure air from without will now flow in at the top of the room and fall upon the stove, which first of all warms it thoroughly, and whence it will flow to all parts of the room except the lowest. There will now be no cold air making in under the door and around the windows, and creating trying draughts; and the impure air, in spite of its efforts to rise, will be forced down to the level of the floor and out of the way of one's breathing. There it will warm the feet on its way to escape through the only exit provided for it. To insure a proper amount of moisture in the heated air—for warm air requires more moisture than cold, in order to make it healthful—an earthen pan should be placed on the top of the stove, and kept filled with water. The ordinary iron urn that crowns the stove does not contain water enough for this purpose.

The essential points in this method are the fresh-air pipe and the register for the escape of air near the floor. A stove thus arranged, especially for isolated rooms, says Mr. LEEDS, "is one of the most economical, as well as most comfortable and wholesome means of heating at our command."

2. The second method to be considered is that of apartments warmed by a current of hot air from a register. Two openings in the walls of the room are necessary in this case—one for the admission, the other for the exit of the air. In practice, the first opening is generally placed where it should be, near the floor, though there have been cases of builders who were stupid enough to admit the warm air at one side of the ceiling, and to let it flow out at the other, without its affecting materially, of course, the temperature of the mass of air in the room. The warm air being thus admitted below, where shall it be allowed to escape? If at any point higher than the level of the floor, a stratum of cold and impure air will be left below the current. This air we wish to displace. There must be no standing air in the room. The rule will be the same as in the case of a room heated by a stove—to make the orifice of exit at the level of the floor. The warm air then, as Dr. FRANKLIN described it, "rises by the mantel-pieces to the ceiling, and spreads all over the top of the room; whereas, being crowded down gradually by the stream of newly-warmed air that follows and rises above it, the whole room becomes in a short time equally warmed." Upon this principle he arranged his celebrated "Franklin" stove—a stove that has hardly been surpassed by any of its rivals during the century that has elapsed since he invented it. The genuine "Franklin" stove is, however, a difficult thing to be found in the market. Makers who have retained its name have too often forgotten its principle of construction.

3. A hot-water furnace is a very healthy means of procuring artificial warmth. It disturbs the conditions of the air less than other methods of heating, but it is a mistake to suppose that it does not "dry" the air. Whenever the temperature of air is raised in any way, its capacity for moisture is increased, and the hot-water furnace, like any other, requires the evaporation of water in order to keep the air in a condition fit for breathing. The only drawback to the general use of this method of heating is its expense, which is greater than that of any other here described.

4. The steam-furnace is especially adapted to cases where the heat has to be conveyed a considerable distance, as in large villas, hotels, hospitals, &c. Steam gives us the most rapid and convenient method known of transporting heat. Under an ordinary steam pressure it will travel seven miles a minute; and Mr. LEEDS believes that in course of time "we shall have steam pipes laid through our streets, as gas and water now are. The present system of separate fires is as crude, extravagant and unnecessary as it would be for every man to make his own gas or have his own well for water." When a steam furnace is used, two-thirds of the heating surface should be put below the floor, and fresh air brought to it there, whence it should be conducted to the rooms through large pipes. This warmed air should be let into the room, as in the cases previously described, at the floor, and discharged at the same level. The remaining third of the heating surface should be allowed to heat the halls and other little-occupied parts of the house by direct radiation. It is very important to have a fresh air box, not merely communicating with the external atmosphere, but communicating in such a way as to convey only the purest air to the furnace. Too much care cannot be taken to see that the air-box should not terminate anywhere near a drain, a sewer, a garbage heap, or standing water. A housekeeper should be quite as particular about the supply of Winter air as about that of Winter potatoes, and under no circumstances should the cold air box have a damper. This is merely a contrivance for keeping fresh air out of the house; and dampers, says Mr. LEEDS, have killed more persons than all the fire-arms ever made in the country. Dampers in air-boxes are good only for kindling-wood." For the same reason, flue-boards are a pest. The fire-place should never be closed, Winter or Summer; the draft of the chimney is one of the most effective means of ventilating, and consequently of preserving health.

5. The open fire, when it can be made large enough in our degenerate modern fire-places, is one of the very best means of heating a single room. One of the completest arrangements is to have a good steam-furnace, with a large fresh-air box, letting in an abundance of air moderately warmed, and overflowing the house, with some direct radiation in the halls; while in the family sitting-room there shall be a bright, cheerful, open fire—a fire that a cat would be willing to lie down before. There are fires that do not come up to even this humble standard of excellence. The impure air of cities is not found so much in the streets as in the badly-warmed and badly-ventilated houses of the poor, and in places of public assembly. Carbonic acid is the great source of vitiation in the atmosphere. In the City of Manchester sixty thousand tons of coal are burned daily, and the smoke of its factory chimneys stretches like a black cloud far into the country, while five hundred tons of carbonic acid are daily thrown from the lungs of its animal life. Yet the "Health of Towns Commission" sought in vain for evidence of any poisonous properties in the air of the streets. Dr. SMITH, of that Commission, exclaimed, "How insignificant are the works of art in contaminating that vast ocean of air that is constantly drooping over the surface of the earth." Pure air contains four parts of carbonic acid in ten thousand. The air of London, Paris, Madrid, Geneva, Washington and other great cities, contains from four to six per cent. only. The air of Manchester is somewhat more contaminated than this, for the poison of city air is not found in the streets. It is in the unventilated houses that life is destroyed. The wonderful cures that are wrought by placing invalids in stables are simply due, in the opinion of more than one medical expert, to the fact that over a stable a consumptive or other patient may generally breathe a purer air than in his own house. The hot, close, unventilated rooms which are so frequently occupied by both well and sick, contain a fouler atmosphere than that of the dirtiest streets. No street air is so impure as that of a close bedroom, as careful tests have shown. Scavengers and laborers in the sewers are healthier than factory girls shut up in their close working-rooms.

In street and railway cars, during the Winter, the air is excessively bad. In the ordinary tenement-house, the poverty of its crowded occupants prevents them from burning sufficient fuel. The doors and windows are constantly kept closed to exclude the cold, and the air is very impure. Hence the great mortality in those houses.

Prisons are execrably ventilated,—a fact which will invest the future of certain City officials of rank with new infelicities. In hospitals the state of things is somewhat better. In schools and boarding-houses the air is almost always bad. At the Maple-wood Institute for young ladies, at Pittsfield, Mass., thirteen girls were sacrificed in a single Summer (that of 1864) to defective drainage and ventilation, and sixty-six of the pupils were sufferers by a foul-air epidemic. The condition of church buildings is better than this, mainly because they are occupied for so small a part of the time. In those of recent construction, however, scientific ventilation is more general. Mr. LEEDS advises us to beware of churches whose roofs show an unbroken sky-line. A chimney is almost as essential to a sanctuary as a clergyman. The chimney, and, in consequence, the ventilation, of the building is too often sacrificed to architectural effect. In theatres, lecture-rooms, and concert-saloons the ventilation is rarely good. The best aired buildings in the country are probably the old-fashioned farm-houses with their stacks of chimneys, each one carrying away a larger current of air than all the flues of a fashionable house together.

The proportions of carbonic acid in the air of different places are well shown in the following table. It should be remembered that pure air contains four parts, and the average street air of cities but six, of carbonic acid in 10,000 parts:

An article in a Boston magazine upon "The Slaughter of the Innocents," published several years ago, explained at length the fatal effect upon children of spending their days in such air as this, the worst that statistics mention.

One of the difficulties to be encountered in procuring ventilation is the unanswerable prejudice still existing in the minds of many against "night air." Night air is simply fresh external air from the dark, generally cooler than that of the day. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN wrote thus, a century ago, to DR INGENHAUS, Court Physician at Vienna: "You physicians have of late happily discovered, after a contrary opinion had prevailed for ages, that fresh and cool air does good to persons in the small-pox and other fevers. It is to be hoped that in another century or two we may all find out that it is not bad even for persons in health. I now look upon fresh air as a friend, and even sleep with an open window." Few intelligent physicians now have any objection to "night air;" yet so lately as the year of the Pittsfield epidemic just mentioned, the Philadelphia Board of Health, then in fear of the advent of cholera, could issue the following extraordinary advice to the public: "Keep your houses open from 10 o'clock until 4 in the afternoon." "During the remaining hours of the day, and through the night, keep the windows closed!" These recommendations to avoid night air, as Mr. LEEDS justly remarks, are simply recommendations to smother ourselves to death; for the carbonic acid from our lungs cannot be removed from our chambers without being replaced by night air; and there is no other fresh air at night except "night air."

It remains to say a few words in respect to Summer ventilation. During warm weather we can have little recourse to the currents produced by columns of artificially heated air. We must depend upon the natural movements of the atmosphere, and rely upon the circumstance that the temperature out of doors is seldom the same as that within. This fact enables us, on all but a few days of stagnant atmosphere, to cause the air to move by a proper management of the windows. Fines are then of little account. To ventilate a room in the morning, the air outside being a little warmer than that within, the window should be opened both from the bottom and the top. The cool air will then pass out below; the warm air will follow in at the top of the window. If the same room needs ventilating in the evening, the current should be reversed. The outside air is then the cooler, and it would pass in at the bottom of the window, while the impure air passes out above. All windows should be made to lower from the top, and by keeping them open both above and below, an agreeable circulation of air may be maintained in the warmest weather.

We may notice one means of comfort of which Mr. LEEDS has omitted to speak. It is sometimes desirable to preserve in a room the cooler temperature of the early morning hours. When this is done in midsummer, it gives much relief from the heat of the afternoon. If the rooms are large, and are not to be used during more than a few hours of the day and by a few persons, the following method may be safely employed: If the rooms in question cannot be left open to the air throughout the night, then open them as early as possible in the morning, and let them become filled with fresh and pure morning air. Close them then as tightly as possible, while they are thus filled, like reservoirs, with cool and fresh air, which should not be used before the middle of the day. Thus, as the heat of the rest of the house increases, these apartments may be occupied, by not more than one or two persons in each room, until the evening brings round again its refreshing coolness, and then the air in these rooms should be changed for a fresh supply. In large houses this method will be found a feasible means, and indeed the only means, of keeping cool during the hottest days.

A great desideratum in warming remains to be accomplished. In the ventilation of the future we shall be provided, during the Winter, with fresh cool air to breathe, and be warmed at the same time by some independent means, as by direct radiation from open fires and steam-pipes. If Mr. LEEDS would show us how this object can be attained, or how we can, as an annoyance, be spared the necessity of breathing air that has been in a sense devitalized by the action of intense heat, we shall welcome a future volume from his pen. The present one is sadly lacking in methodic arrangement, being composed of lectures and miscellaneous articles, in which there is much needless going over of the same ground. But it serves a useful purpose by informing us, at a timely season, of the most approved means of procuring tolerably fresh air and warmth.

THE LIFE OF JOHN P. KENNEDY. By HENRY T. TUCKERMAN. New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & SONS.

JOHN P. KENNEDY was a man who achieved no brilliant triumphs, either in literature or public life, but he won for himself a very respectable position in both. His biography is interesting and instructive, not because he attracted the world's attention by any remarkable achievements requiring genius of the highest order, but because he was a man who gave his attention liberally to study and cultivation, and at the same time took a noted share in the conduct of public affairs. He sought the best culture within his reach, and loved literature. Accordingly we find him occupying no mean position as an author. He believed that the service of his country demanded some portion of his time, and he freely gave it to find his reward in high stations in the National Government and the honor that belongs thereto. It is fitting that the biography of such a man should be written for the encouragement and instruction of our youth, who are too apt to grow up without lofty aims or noble efforts. No one was better qualified to write the life of Mr. KENNEDY than his friend HENRY T. TUCKERMAN. Within the limits of a volume of moderate compass, he has included all that need be told of the career of an eminent American. The way in which he has told the story, it is unnecessary to state, is clear and straightforward, and therefore best calculated to convey the instruction which it contains.

SCHOOL-HOUSES. By JAMES JOHONNOT. Architectural Designs by S. E. HEWES. New-York: WM. SCHUYLERBURG & Co.

This is an elegant and extremely valuable work on the proper construction of school buildings. It contains finely-drawn designs, ranging from the plainest and cheapest styles to the most ornate and expensive, accompanied by clear and intelligent comments and explanations. The important subjects of heating and ventilation, as well as other scarcely less important ones of comfort and convenience, are fully attended to. A copy of the book ought to be in the hands of every body of men having charge of the construction of a new school-house or the renovation of an old one.

BEHIND THE BARS. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD.

Many papers have been written and read, and many speeches made, on the important subject of the proper treatment of the insane, but never before, so far as we remember, has one of the unfortunates who have suffered from the mistakes and wrongs of the present system given his own experience of the asylums, and his views with regard to the treatment of their inmates. The author of this book, however, appears to have passed some portion of his life "behind the bars," and now comes forth to bear his own testimony on what he saw and experienced there. The feelings of the patients in the public asylums, and the extent to which they appreciate the restraints under which they are placed, are vividly portrayed, as well as the injudicious, foolish, and often cruel conduct of those who have them in charge. The book will throw a good deal of light on the relations which generally exist between the insane and their keepers, and afford many suggestions as to the relations which ought to exist between them. One point brought out with especial power is the injudiciousness, not to say barbarity, of keeping patients confined long after the necessity for it has ceased, and of keeping them too much isolated. The experience described in some parts of the book would be likely to make a sane person mad, and is certainly not calculated to minister with good effect to a mind diseased. The powers of observation and discrimination, and the memory of the author, seem to be rather remarkable. There is something too much of general reflection, and a disposition to be a trifle rhapsodical in his book, which mar its effect to some degree, but at the same time it gives a more striking picture of a phase of life which requires the most considerate attention than has hitherto appeared.

EIRENE; OR, A WOMAN'S RIGHT. By MARY CLEMMER AMES. New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & Co.

The first part of Eirene was published in Putnam's Magazine, and awakened considerable interest. Those who read the opening chapters then will be glad that the whole story has now made its appearance. It is a thoroughly American novel, the scene being laid mainly in New-England and New-York. It is the story of a poor, deserving country girl, who left home to work in a factory, where her employer's son fell in love with her, or, at least imagined so, and when he had won her affections, was wheedled into a declaration of love to a wealthy beauty whom his ambitious mother desired him to marry. Eirene having accidentally overheard this declaration, gave him up in spite of his own protestations, and went to New-York to earn her livelihood. As may be imagined, she met with many difficulties and discouragements, but after a hard experience, including some time as a nurse in the army, came out of all triumphant, and married a wealthy New-Yorker who had seen and appreciated her value. Thus she was made happy, and was enabled to place her father's family in comfortable circumstances. The story is simple but interesting, and the sketches of life and character, especially those belonging to the New-England rural districts and factory villages, truthful and lifelike. The story can be commended for its pure tone and excellent lesson.

THE COUSIN FROM INDIA. A Book for Girls. By GEORGIANA M. CRAIK. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS.

This little volume forms the second in the series of "books for girls," to be prepared for publication under the direction of Mrs. CRAIK, (Miss MULOCK,) so familiarly known as the author of John Halifax, Gentleman. The first, Little Sunshine's Holiday, from her own pen, and the present story by her kinswoman, the author of Mildred, and other popular tales, open the series with high promises of good things for the entertainment of the girls. The Cousin from India is a very interesting story of a preternaturally clever and wicked little minx, who made her appearance in the quiet family of her good aunt to make mischief and trouble, and in the long run to get converted from her wicked ways by the suffering and death of one of her little play-fellows, and to be put in the way of becoming a good and thoughtful, as well as brilliant girl after all. The story is exceedingly well contrived, the character of the mischievous Effie being drawn with unusual skill.

GIDEON'S ROCK. By KATHERINE SAUNDERS. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.

Gideon's Rock is a story of much interest, told in a straightforward and forcible style. The characters are humble enough, but life among such presents scenes as varied and interesting as any that can be found on a higher social level. The principal characters are two brothers, Andrew and Gideon Weir, and Alice Flemming. The brothers are fishermen and smugglers on the Kentish coast, as is also the father of Alice. The scenes portrayed are confined to the life and experiences of these rude folk, and the incidents spring out of the love of both brothers for the same girl. On these materials the author has worked with a good deal of skill, and produced a tale of more than ordinary power and interest. Its popularity in England has been very great.

WOMEN OF THE COMMUNE

The Trial of the Petroleuses—Convictions and Sentences.

Versailles Correspondence of the Pall Mall Gazette.

We had a full Court on Monday, Sept. 4, to witness the trial of the first batch of pétroleuses, five in number. The President was Col. BOURSEBRMEIRE, who had transferred his sittings from the Palace of Justice, and the prosecutor, Capt. JOUBERT, whose eloquence has been so fatal to the Communalist prisoners of the Fourth Court during the last three weeks. It had been reported that there were some young and attractive women in the first batch, but the statement proved only half true. The women were young enough, the oldest being no more than thirty-two, and the youngest twenty-four; but their appearance was repulsive in the extreme, being that of the lowest, most depraved class of women in the worst quarter of large towns. Their clothes were squalid, their hair undressed, their features coarse, bestial and sullen. It was difficult to get up much interest in creatures so devoid of all that graces their sex, and I was not surprised to see the Court gradually thin as the day wore on. Let me here, however, make a remark which is founded on personal observation. No matter how hideous may be the crimes of which a man is accused, and let the man himself be the most abject and despicable being of his species, there is always some woman who believes in him, grieves for him, and would be ready to sacrifice herself on his behalf, if by so doing she could secure his safety. At every trial where a man is being judged one may, by searching, discover a woman whose face is fixed yearningly on the prisoner, and who, should a chance be pronounced, elbow forward alone to take into the criminal's head between her hands and rob some words of comfort into his ear. But this is not the case where women are concerned. When a woman falls she seems to fall absolutely unfriended. Her crimes have not often been her own. The retribution is all hers, and there is nobody who cares either to share it or alleviate it. During the two days' trial of the pétroleuses, I heard not a single word of sympathy pronounced in favor of any of them—not one. I went out on purpose during the adjournment for luncheon on the first day and mixed with the crowd of working men who generally hang about the public entrance to the Court, hoping that I might pick up a stray word or two of information respecting some of the women. As I expected, there were several men who knew them, had lived in the same street as they, and there was one who seemed very precise on the subject of the youngest prisoner, who, said he, had acted as nurse to the woman and children of the wounded at the barricades. But there was no sympathy on their part—rather the contrary; and this though they were almost lachrymose in alluding to a former acquaintance of theirs who had got into trouble "for usurping functions." To make all this more palatable, it appears that the women are as much forsaken in their captivity as they are in Court. Every male prisoner at the Orangerie has visitors who bring him money or food delicacies; but scarcely one woman in ten receives visits. Nay, there is a thing that would seem incredible now for the curious contradictions in woman's nature—some of these abandoned creatures had managed to save a few francs out of their nameless misery and to conceal them in the lining of their clothes while they were being searched; but instead of spending money on their own wants, as men never fail to do, their one thought was how to get it conveyed to their paramours.

PRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE.

The names and trades of the five pétroleuses were BETIN, paper-maker; SUZERAIN, washerwoman; MARCHAIS, charwoman; PAPAVOINE, seamstress; and BOCQUIN, (who is married,) milliner. The charge against them was that of having set fire to the Palace of the Legion of Honor, and to the mansions of Counts DE CHABROL, DE BACHMANN, and DE BERTHIER in the Rue de Lille. The evidence was of a rather sensational character, for a Mme. THOMAS, wife of the concierge of Count DE CHABROL, described how her master's house was invaded, ransacked, and finally set fire to, her husband the while being apprehended in the cellar, where he had hid himself, and summarily shot by the insurgents at a barricade. Mme. THOMAS, however, could not identify any of the five prisoners as having taken part in the sacking of the houses or the executions. All she knew was that the pillage was chiefly conducted by women, and that the women showed even a greater pertinacity than the men in resisting the Versailles troops. There was abundant evidence to the same vague effect as this from other persons; but few witnesses could positively swear to the identity of the women arraigned. It should be mentioned that in opening the case, Col. BOISDENEMETZ had announced his intention of examining the prisoners separately—that is, only one remaining in Court at a time, the reason being that all the five had accusations to bring against one another. This arrangement, however, was only carried out as regards the girl BETIN, and proved quite unnecessary, for the prisoners, instead of accusing, sought, with a generosity rather rare in criminal Courts, to disculpate one another. As to their own personal defence, it was in every case the same: they had followed their paramours to the barricades but, once there, had done nothing save help the wounded. They appealed to such witnesses as recognized them to say whether it was not a fact that their sole occupation had been to forage for fuel and the witnesses acknowledged that certainly three out of the five women had been seen acting as ambulancières; but they also contended that the women carried rifles, and encouraged the insurgents repeatedly not to fail back. Two colleagues of the Rue de Lille, named STAHLIN and AUDET, gave a lamentable account of the depredations committed by the battalions of Eudes and Mégy, and by that ruffianly corps, "Les Enfans Perdus," who were the scum of all foreign nations, and enjoyed, even among the reddest Communalists, a reputation for ferocity and thievishness. These, as well as the other witnesses, placed it beyond all possible doubt that the Palace of the Legion of Honor and the Rue de Lille had been deliberately fired with petroleum, not accidentally ignited by shells.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The second day's trial opened with a declaration from Col. BOISDENEMETZ that two barristers of the Versailles Bar, whom he had deputed ex officio to act as counsel for the prisoners MARCHAIS and BOCQUIN, had not thought fit to appear, and that he would consequently lodge a complaint against them with their BÂTONNIER for contempt of Court. By and by the complaint against one of the two, Maître ANGE, was withdrawn, the explanation being received that no notice had been sent him; but the other, Maître MARCHAND, will probably be censured, and perhaps suspended, though it is doubtful whether his intended client missed much by his absence, her defense having been most ably conducted by a young artillery Lieutenant, whom the President had deputed to speak for her, almost extempore. Col. BOISDENEMETZ is an officer of much sterner stuff than Col. MERLIN. He conducts the trial at a steeple-chase pace, and is always recommending the counsel to be brief. He was not untrue to the prisoners, but once told them, with more frankness than there was need for, that he did not believe their statements, and that they would not be believed by the public. Up to the moment when the Prosecutor spoke, the women bore up pretty well, only whimpering a little now and then, and shedding a few tears when witnesses persisted in affirming very steadfastly facts which they themselves denied. But when Capt. JOUBERT, in the course of a very impressive speech, said that after all he felt a great pity for these women who had been debased by vicious habits and who had been made the tools of men far more guilty than themselves, three of them sank down and sobbed in a way that was heart-breaking to hear. And yet one would rather have had the women cry in this way than be callous. Women are only women when they display the virtues and sensibility of their sex.

THE SENTENCE.

The sentence was pronounced downard's on Tuesday afternoon in a very off-hand and soldier-like way. Three of the prisoners, BETIN, SUZERAIN and MARCHAIS, were condemned to death; PAPAVOINE to transportation for life; BOCQUIN to ten years' solitary confinement. It is a hopeful sign that the sentences of death will be carried out, public opinion in France being generally averse to the execution of women. But the sentence suggests the reflection that the five Communalists, FERRÉ, URBAIN, BILLIORAY, CHAMPY, FERAT, and VERDURIER, who have appealed against the judgment of Col. MERLIN'S Court in their case, and who may possibly get a new trial in the Fourth Court, will find Col. BOISDENEMETZ a much less pleasant Judge than the other. It must be remembered that a French Court of Appeal cuts both ways; it may mitigate a sentence, but it may also increase it, and the gallant President of the Fourth Court is not a very likely man for mitigation.

UNITED ITALY.

The Troubles of the Ministry—Movements of the King—Affairs in Rome—A Compliment Appreciated—Expositions of Native Products—The Cathedral of Florence—The Season.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, Saturday, Sept. 2, 1871.

Politics are at the Baths, continues to be said as an excuse for the poverty of political intelligence. The Ministers of the Crown are running up and down the Peninsula in pursuit of one or another object; but quite as much intent upon compassing some private purpose as the attainment of political ends. The crisis a little while ago threatened in this body, seems no longer to impend, or is at least less talked about. The foreign Ministers resident at the Italian Court, are enjoying still their Summer vacation, most anxious about a matter of much great importance as to how their archives and themselves are to be housed another year.

MOVEMENTS OF THE KING.

The KING is taking his ease at some town in his favorite North, and the hereditary Prince is making a visit to his brother, the King of Spain. It does not seem probable that Rome, any more than Florence, will be to VICTOR EMMANUEL a place in which he will find it pleasant to pass a great part of the year. Turin will continue to be the home of the King's affections. The newspapers complain that Rome is left for the time quite without the authority of the actual presence of the King and his counsellors. "The administration of the Kingdom of Italy has never been a model of industry or precision," says the journal, the Nazione. But it is encouraging to observe that the machine moves tolerably well without its chief engineers.

AFFAIRS IN ROME.

The disturbances at Rome last week have been made much account of as indicating the hostile state of feeling against the Ecclesiastical Party still existing in the lower stratum of the social body, in spite of many reasons why a spirit of conciliation should be shown. The Government is making every effort to seat itself, and does what it can to make things go easy, but encounters currents against which headway is slowly made. Many of the patrician families are firmly resolved not to dispose of any of their great palace structures for the accommodation of the new administration, and some of these families have an over stock of large houses which might now be sold at four or five times the former valuation.

A COMPLIMENT APPRECIATED.

The Italians were much gratified when they learned that the Governments of the United States and England had made VICTOR EMMANUEL one of the Committee of Sovereigns to select the five arbitors for the adjustment of the Alabama question. The King has named the Count SCLOPIS, Senator and Minister of State of the Kingdom, and President of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Turin, to be his representative man in the circle of amici curiæ charged with this important commission. A leading journal recognizes in the choice of the King of Italy by the International Council an evidence of the esteem and confidence felt by two great nations for this country. "It is a proof that Italy has really taken a place among States of the first order—not only for population and extension of territory, but for the authority which its policy has been able to acquire."

EXPOSITIONS OF NATIVE PRODUCTS.

The public has been much interested lately in the various expositions of native products, which have been held in the principal cities of the Kingdom. Today that of Milan is to be opened, and facilities greater than usual are offered by the railway companies for reaching that city from the remotest parts of the Peninsula. The International Exposition to be held at Vienna in 1873, begins to be talked about. According to the plan laid out, this is to be made the most extensive of any yet held in any part of the world. The Palace is to have a length in its greatest extent of 3,000 feet, and the land reserved for all the uses connected with the show, will be much greater than that of the Paris Exposition of 1867. Since the old prejudice has worn off the people of this country have looked toward Austria with a feeling of increasing interest. There are more reasons, now that each country is acting in its own sphere, why Italians and Austrians should like each other, than were believed possible before. It is a proof of the amiability of this people that it can so soon wish well to its old oppressors. Sometimes the suspicion arises that the newly-formed German State, inspired with an imperial ambition, may wish to plant a foot upon the Adriatic and get possession of the port of Trieste. It would be extremely convenient to have such a door opened, with unobstructed passage toward the East. Austria left with Dalmatia would still have an extensive water-front, but Italy would prefer not to have two German Powers so near her door.

THE CATHEDRAL OF FLORENCE.

The question long under discussion of the construction of the front of the Cathedral of Florence has been settled in part by the selection of the design. During the past dozen years not less than thirty architects have tried their hand upon this work, but while professional skill has done its best, and criticism has exhausted itself, until these last few months no decision has been arrived at. So many plans were submitted that the Committee here was bewildered, and the matter was finally left to a European Commission, which has made choice of the design, much to the disgust of a number of competing architects, and much fault finding on the part of their friends. A rich crust of colored marbles, such as that which covers the rest of the building, is to be spread over the vast expanse of the front. It is not known when the work will actually be begun, for the amount of money already collected does not exceed two hundred thousand francs, while the whole outlay has been estimated as high as six millions. The amount of sculpture to be introduced into this broad surface of nearly as much of perpendicular extent, we can hardly form a conception of from any similar work yet executed. Nine times the corner-stone has been laid, and no progress is yet witnessed. When a beginning is fairly made, if money comes in freely, it is thought the work may be pushed forward with so much energy as to give hope of seeing the façade raised within a period of ten years. During the Summer workmen have been busy scaling off the incrustations which have been accumulating for centuries, and a number of large windows and niches walled up at different periods, have been exposed. Two or three mosaics of an early date have been discovered, evidently put on originally to try the effect of that kind of ornament. The front now presents a singular aspect. The huge gaps made in the walls, of enormous thickness, give a wild, picturesque roughness to the mass, not unlike that of a Roman ruin. We have seen the front of Santa Croce carried up in six years, with the money in great part supplied by a foreigner of our own race. The Cathedral front is an undertaking of much greater extent; but it is not one of impossible achievement.

THE SEASON.

The hot and dry Italian Summer is drawing to a close. In this region the grape yield, the most important of all the agricultural productions, promises abundance. The grape loves the sun, and this year it has had enough of it to turn its juices into streams of golden and purple wealth. There is no water in the bed of the Arno, except that in the stagnant pools before the city, collected to give the humbler classes of the population an attic-theatric bath. Few have yet come back to the hot town, for it is pleasant still to sit in some cool cell among the hills, or loll at ease by the breezy sea. But the streets are as much thronged as they would be were there no temporary diminution of the population. The Italians love to pass most of the time out of doors. A. J.

Excitement Over the Medellin Slave Bill—Probability of Its Becoming a Law—Diplomatic Changes—Indian Massacre—Remarkable Story in Regard to the Dover Tichborne—The War in Uruguay.

From Our Own Correspondent.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Friday, Aug. 25, 1871.

The capital of the Brazils has been in a perfect fever of excitement for months, owing to the bitter animosities aroused by the agitation of the slave bill in the Brazilian Parliament. In the Chamber of Deputies the bill has passed the second reading as amended by the Special Committee, and is now at its third reading. Señor FRANCISCO MALHEIROS, on the part of the minority, has moved the suppression of the free birth clause and others less important in the bill, with a view of reducing its provisions to a restatement of the slaves, and to annual emancipation by a fund, toward which he proposes a tax of two milreis on the new exempt agricultural slaves. It is confidently expected here that the bill will pass the Chamber of Deputies next week, but it is supposed that the debate in the Senate will be so prolonged as to render it impossible for it to become a law this year. While the Liberals in the Senate have declared their adhesion to the leading principle of the bill, the Moderado faction have announced their sympathy with the Opposition in the Chamber of Deputies, and their intention to oppose it obstinately. But, I will not attempt to elucidate the mysteries of Brazilian politics; they are inexplicable. Owing to the time occupied in the debates on the slave bill, the budget for 1872-73 will not be taken up this session. The Minister of Finance will move to extend the fiscal year six months longer. The Government has appointed the Barão DO RIO GRANDE arbitrator in the question raised by Sir CHARLES BRUCE, M. E. WEBB and M. F. JONES, holders of the ocean telegraphic cable concession, in regard to an alleged infringement of their right in the concession given to Señores LAMAS for a telegraphic cable from Rio to Buenos Ayres. A few days ago the Chevalier DE GLEICH and Count KOSKULL had a private audience of Her Imperial Highness, the Princess Regent, the former to deliver his letter of recall, and the latter to present his credentials, accrediting him Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for Russia. The New-York firm of GULICK & HERRE have made a proposal to the Provincial Assembly at Maranhão to construct a railway from the capital to Rosario, the passage of the Mosquito channel to be effected by a suspension bridge sufficiently elevated to permit vessels passing beneath. The whole line is to be finished in three years. It is reported here that two Indians, having been tied up and whipped in the Maroon settlement of Monte Alteon, in the province of Maranhão, the Indians of the surrounding country banded together and fell suddenly upon the village, slaying every one, young or old, within it. Only three of all the inhabitants escaped the slaughter. Hundreds are said to have perished in the butchery. A very startling story comes from the interior of Brazil relative to the great Tichbourne case, lately on trial in London. Señor JULIO FRANCISCO BERNANT, a gentleman of undoubted veracity and the highest respectability, now residing in the province of Minas Geraes, declares that he traveled with CHARLES R. TICHBOURNE from Lima, Peru, that they resided together in Rio de Janeiro; and that Mr. TICHBOURNE purchased some pictures and curiosities from him and forwarded them to his mother, Lady TICHBOURNE. He further states that Mr. TICHBOURNE sailed in the Bella for New-York, which vessel was lost with all on board. He still holds the passport of CHARLES R. TICHBOURNE. Señor BERNANT believes that the rightful Mr. TICHBOURNE was lost at sea, and considers the present claimant an impostor.

The news from the Rio de la Plata is unimportant. In the Argentine Republic the Entre-Riano squabble was brought to a climax by the defeat of Gen. URQUIZO, who has espoused the cause of the expelled Governor, and invaded Santiago from Cordova. The Argentine Senate has decided in favor of Villa Maria as the capital of the Confederation. The Trans-Andine telegraphic snow cable will be inaugurated early in September with imposing ceremonies. The City of Buenos Ayres is gradually recovering its wonted liveliness. The fever has entirely disappeared, business begins to pursue its old channels, and everything daily assumes a more cheering aspect. In Uruguay the civil war still continues, and is likely to continue as long as inordinate ambition, intrigue and the influence of the Jesuits pervade the country. The Bishop of Uruguay endeavored to bring about peace between the two parties of the civil war, but on the 27th of July, while the Bishop's negotiation was being considered, and after an armistice had been ordered by the President, the Governmental Army attacked the insurgent force near Colonia, routed it, captured its artillery and most of its infantry. The President having published an amnesty, a large number of rebels have surrendered, but it is said that the insurgents are still in a condition to prolong the war indefinitely.

THE PENSION AGENCY.

The Agent and His Duty—Scenes and Incidents of the Office—How Fraud is Attempted and Prevented.

The office of the United States Pension Agency in this City for the payment of pensions to soldiers' widows and orphans, has recently been, under the direction of Mr. MULLETT, supervising architect of the Treasury Department, entirely changed from its former smooth appearance to one of neatness and cleanliness.

Col. LOCKWOOD L. DOTY, the Pension Agent, was Gov. MORGAN'S efficient Private Secretary, and subsequently Chief of the Bureau of Military Statistics and Assessor of Internal Revenue, besides holding other positions of trust and responsibility. His executive ability and indomitable perseverance have been successfully employed in his new field of labor. Untiring zeal, energy, and a close application to his intricate duties, have been as well displayed, that the interests of the Government are protected and observed on the one hand, and the rights of pensioners scrupulously regarded on the other.

Col. DOTY has inscribed upon the rolls of his agency nearly five thousand names of persons who reside in different parts of the world, from Prince Edward's Island to Australia. Those living in foreign lands are required to execute the proper vouchers before a civil magistrate, whose authority to take depositions is certified by an American Consul, or, as in most frequent by the same, the papers are duly executed by the pensioner, accompanied with two credible witnesses, before the Consul himself, who at once returns them to the Agency here. Upon its receipt, a bill of exchange for that amount due is forwarded immediately to the pensioner, with a blank voucher for Examination Before Judge Dowling Yesterday.

Strong Evidence Against the Creatures of the Ring.

Gratuitous Assaults of Counsel on Judge Ledwith.

Facts and Rumors Around the City Hall Yesterday.

THE STOLEN VOUCHERS.

Proceedings Before Justice Dowling Yesterday—The Evidence Against Hagerty and Balch—The Case Not Concluded.

It is not to be wondered at that such desperate measures were resorted to by the thieves of the Ring, to obtain possession of the vouchers which they stole from the Controller's office. These vouchers, as we have before explained, were for altered bills, which were sworn to in the most reckless manner, and were made out by claimants in direct collusion with the Ring. Bills so altered were of course forgeries, while those which overstated the just amounts would convict the signers of perjury; and it was to avoid prosecution for forgery and perjury that the evidences of these crimes were stolen from the Controller's office. It is the opinion of a gentleman high in authority in this City that one of the greatest reasons for the clamorousness which exist between members of the Ring is, that HAGERTY and BALCH did not half do their work, and that while they obtained and destroyed some of the forged vouchers, they overlooked many others, so that while some members of the Ring are enabled to defy criminal prosecution, others know that the evidence against them is in the hands of those who will use it unsparingly to secure their downfall.

Promptly at 10 o'clock yesterday morning the doors of the Court-room of the Special Sessions at the Tombs opened, and the immense crowd that had assembled in the vestibule rushed in, and very soon there was scarcely standing room to be found. Capts KENNEDY, of the Sixth Precinct, at an early hour detailed a section of men who intercepted all comers, and allowed none to pass except those who had a right to be present. Still, as stated above, the Court-room was unduly crowded, but the audience was of a different complexion from that usually found in a Police Court. Judges, eminent lawyers, political leaders, and reputable citizens took the places of thieves, bummers, and adventurers. Judge REDFORD, for a short time, was seated on the bench with Justice DOWLING. At the prosecuting officer's desk was District-Attorney GARVIN, and on the right and left were the reporters. Mr. JOHN GRAHAM, the counsel for the accused, did not arrive until late, and seated himself on the extreme right of the counselors' table. On Mr. GRAHAM'S left were Ex-Judge WILLIAM A. BEACH and his son, MILES A. BEACH, Ex-Mayor of Troy, Ex-United States District-Attorney SAMUEL G. COURTNEY, and Mr. RUFUS F. ANDREWS, the formidable array of counsel of Controller CONNOLLY. Ex-Judge WM. C. BARRETT, representing the Committee of Seventy, sat next to and during the progress of the examination was consulted frequently by Judge GARVIN. Superintendent KELSO, Chief Detective IRVING, Detectives RADFORD, DUSHERBERRY and BENNETT were seen among the multitude inside the railing, and later in the day Surrogate HUTCHINGS, Col. DURLAP, Prof. BERGH and County Auditor LYMAN were present.

HAGERTY, dressed in the latest mode, with an enormous diamond, which in size could have only been rivaled by the brilliant owned by his brother, blazing on his shirt-bosom, sat or rather reclined in a chair near the reporters' table. At times he would appear excessively nervous and downcast, and clutched spasmodically with one hand an ivory-headed cane, and with the fingers of the other snapped constantly a quill tooth-pick. Notwithstanding he is backed by all the power of Tammany and Mr. TWEED'S gold, he evidently keenly felt his position, and betrayed more than once the intense agony which he experienced. BALCH also appeared to realize his predicament. He looked much agitated, and his brow and lips twitched with nervous excitement often during the proceedings, and particularly when consulted by his counsel, Mr. GRAHAM.

Soon after his arrival Mr. GRAHAM opened the proceedings by moving that Mrs. HAGERTY's name be added to that of HAGERTY and BALCH as a third party to the complaints made before Justice DOWLING, in order to remove her from the jurisdiction of Justice LEDWITH. This motion the prisoners' counsel argued with the greatest earnestness.

MR. GRAHAM MAKES A MOTION.

Mr. GRAHAM said: If your Honor please, there seems to be, if I may say so, a species of political diplomacy going on in this City at this time, which, instead of furthering, is calculated to impede the administration of justice, and instead of allowing the enforcement of the laws to remain impartial and neutral, seeks to wrest it from the proper quarter and direction and place it in the hands of those who, whatever interest they may take in public affairs, certainly seem to me from the activity and zeal they display to be more interested for their own aggrandizement than anything else. The complaint was made by the Superintendent of Police, Mr. KELSO, to your Honor upon information which came to him in reference to the connection of the parties I represent with a burglary committed upon the Controller's office in this City. It is supposed, Sir, that judicial comity and courtesy required that no other Magistrate should interfere. The matter should have been left to the first Magistrate who had jurisdiction in a legal way, so as not to have been made the subject of criticism for his motives, or have his motive attacked or his jurisdiction assailed. But if a Magistrate who thought fit to have the jurisdiction of the first Magistrate attacked had consulted his own self-respect, or, at all events, had deferred to that comity and courtesy which are supposed to prevail among and between Courts, with a view to prevent any unpleasant conflicts or collisions between them, he would have declined to act on the premises. It seems to me that the jurisdiction of your Honor does not include the party against whom the Magistrate to whom I refer issued the warrant. For some cause or other he thought it proper to divide this apple in two and allow one half to remain here and take the other half to himself. Nevertheless, your Honor had gained the jurisdiction in this matter, and it seemed to be irreconcilable with a sense of the propriety of these seventy gentlemen, who want everything in the shape of public power assigned over to them, absolutely to interfere with the jurisdiction which your Honor had first gained in this case. A warrant was issued against the wife of one of the parties included in the complaint now before the Court. Now when your Honor took this complaint you didn't take a complaint simply against individuals—you took the subject matter of the complaint into your hands, and whether that subject matter reached the two individuals who are particularly named in the papers placed before you, or whether the developments which were likely to ensue upon a prosecution and investigation of that complaint, enlarged the scope of your Honor's cognizance and jurisdiction, you at all events took jurisdiction over the subject matter of this burglary, and, as I have already said, comity and courtesy excluded the interference of any other Magistrate. It was known to the Chief of Police in this City—a fact which, I think, has led to a very unmerited attack in the public prints—who, in discharge of his duty, came before you and alleged this complaint. The proceedings were in embryo, and jurisdiction over them was claimed by the Magistrate to whom I refer. The wife of one of these defendants was arrested at 9 or 10 o'clock yesterday morning, some eight hours after the arrest of her husband, and has remained prisoner ever since. Now, the motion which I intend to make is that your Honor attach the name of this lady to these proceedings, and that the District-Attorney of this county, upon his official responsibility, see that this lady, if she is really a participant in this crime, be brought here, and not prosecuted separately before another tribunal. This case is one upon which rests the interest of the public, not only in a pecuniary point of view, but in a governmental point of view. Now, in reference to the Magistrate to whom I refer, for whom personally I have the highest regard, for most pleasant relations exist between him and myself, I think we can show that he was applied to yesterday by a friend of this lady to have an interview with her, and he (the Magistrate) made a response that no person of this island should see her, as the matter involved ten millions of dollars. So that the action against this lady does not proceed so much from a desire to redress the public wrong or to administer public justice, as to the pecuniary amount which seems to be at stake. Now, we know that that Magistrate was an aspirant to the office of Mayor; we know that he received a highly respectable vote for that office, and he naturally feels all the feelings of disappointment which would be created within the breast of any one who is an aspirant to public favor. Mr. GRAHAM here indulged in a general talk with reference to this subject, and to the chance of Judge LEDWITH'S election under a nomination which he may hereafter get, and then said: Now, Sir, that Magistrate who has been one of this Committee of Seventy, who is below, closeted with Mr. CONNOLLY, who believes fully everything that Mr. CONNOLLY tells him, who ignores the idea that Mr. CONNOLLY is trying to fasten crimes of his own commission upon persons who I believe are just as pure as they can be, who assumes the treble position of Judge, counsel and complainant in a proceeding of this kind, who is participating in everything that is done, who is co-operating in all the action taken, does not stand in a very favorable aspect before the public in his dealings with reference to this case. Now, to deliver any part of this case to a prejudiced Judge is not what the law contemplated to be done. To suppose that a Grand Juror after he indicts a man, can take his seat as Judge to try him, that a complainant after he has given his testimony before an indicting body, can transform himself into a District-Attorney and Judge, is an anomaly which, to the credit of our jurisprudence, is not recognized or known in its administration. Mr. GRAHAM here went on to review the circumstances of the case more broadly, asking that it be so far extended as to include within it the name of the wife of HAGERTY, to whom he had referred. He also went on to state that the burned heap (supposed to be the stolen vouchers) found on the premises of Mrs. HAGERTY immediately after her arrest was a "put-up job" for the purpose of conviction. After a very elaborate review of the general circumstances of the case he quoted Lord HALE and other authorities to show that, at least so far as the wife was concerned, she was not a culpable party in the transaction. The woman, in order to be guilty, should have been proved to be the original contriver of the theft. No such proof was at present in existence, nor would be forthcoming. If she merely assisted in the burglary (supposing the burglary to have been perpetrated by her husband) and rendered such assistance at the coercion of her husband, then she was innocent, and no charge could be sustained against her. It was more likely that in this case she had, in case she assisted in the burglary, done so, if at all, through coercion. He also quoted the case of QUINLAN against the People in advancement of his views. In conclusion, he asked that the complaint be so amended as to include the name of the lady in it. He asked that the complaint against her be brought on here now. There was a determination of some parties to prevent justice. He had examined this matter with great care, and he honestly felt that it was a great outrage to detain her any longer in custody.

JUDGE GARVIN REPLIES.

Judge GARVIN next spoke on the subject. He recited the circumstances of the burglary committed on the night of the 10th inst. An extraordinary proposition was made by his learned friend on the other side to introduce into this complaint another person, which person, he says, was not guilty, and whether she participated in this transaction or not, could not under any conceivable circumstances be held for examination or tried on any indictment. In other words, the learned gentleman proposed to place him (the District-Attorney) in a position in which he wanted him to defend a person charged with burglary.

In answer to the learned gentleman at the other side he should say that in no manner directly or indirectly had his Honor power to bring the female prisoner into this Court. That course he hoped his Honor would not try to pursue, as another and brother Magistrate had got possession of the case—had jurisdiction over her and held her by virtue of his commitment. The District-Attorney went on at some length counseling his Honor not to take any steps with a view of taking the case out of the hands of Judge LEDWITH. The briefs he had in his hands before him were conclusive with reference to the charge against her. The law in the case was clear and distinct, perfect and complete. Having reviewed the remedy which plaintiff's counsel could secure by habeas corpus, in case she were proven to be the wife of the prisoner HAGERTY, the District-Attorney reiterated the assertion that the Court had no power to act on Mr. GRAHAM'S suggestion, and that whichever Magistrate it was brought before would do full justice to it. He was firmly of opinion that when murder and burglary and arson were stalking abroad so daringly and defiantly in our midst, it was important, and it was time for the public to know, once for all, that those who commit crime should be punished.

REMARKS OF MR. BARRETT.

Mr. W. C. BARRETT here rose and briefly addressed the Court. He said: I simply rise, as a member of the Committee of Seventy, to which my learned friend has alluded, to correct the extraordinary remarks he has made. I had some part in the preparation of those affidavits and in the issuing of that warrant. And I say, Sir, from my personal knowledge of Mr. LEDWITH, he never knew anything about it as all until the affidavits were laid before him at 6½ o'clock on the night before last. He was not instrumental, Sir, and knew nothing at all of the case as a member of the Committee. And, Sir, I will further say, in relation to this Committee of Seventy, that they had no hand in the collation of that testimony, or in the preparation of those affidavits, or bringing those affidavits before Judge LEDWITH. It was done, Sir, by one member of that Committee upon his individual responsibility. I am astonished, Sir, that a counsel of his experience and his character should attempt to denounce a committee of valued citizens for the reason that they are engaged in a duty which is the suppression of fraud, which has been an outrage on the whole community.

MR. GRAHAM'S REJOINDER.

Mr. GRAHAM followed in some lengthy remarks. He said: I believe there are men in the City who would sacrifice all their property to stop dishonesty in the administration of municipal affairs. The majority of the Committee of Seventy are pure-minded men, among the best and most honorable to be found on this island. But they are overreaching themselves through the machinations of certain political sore-heads and disappointed aspirants for office. I respect Justice LEDWITH, and probably, if I could have had my way, he would now be Mayor of the City, but I object to this case going before him. Justice LEDWITH is not the proper man to administer justice in this matter.

THE MOTION DENIED.

Judge DOWLING then said: In issuing my warrants I acted partly on information I received from Superintendent KELSO, but no blame can be attached to him. Judge DOWLING then denied the motion by saying that it was not in his power to grant it.

THE TESTIMONY.

The subjoined testimony was then taken:

S. E. LYONS, County Auditor, sworn: Was appointed by Controller CONNOLLY; was in the office on Sept. 9, and saw certain papers there, bills and vouchers; they came from the Board of Supervisors; examined a check drawn for the amount; [witness explains the routine until the bills are filed, way;] there were probably 1,500 or 2,000 bills, covering two years, and representing about $12,000,000; when a bill is paid a receipt is put upon it, signed by the claimant, and then put on file; the Controller, Mayor, and Clerk of the Board of Supervisors sign the warrant, which is payable to the order of the claimant; the bills are put away in bundles in pigeon-holes; tied up; they are numbered; they are so placed as to be found easily when required; the book does not state what they are, but it does the nature of the vouchers; the bills referred to were there on the 9th September; on arriving at the office on the 11th September, discovered that the window had been broken; missed nothing then; went to his own room and found that the door of the closet had been pried open, and the vouchers gone; three doors had been thus broken open; the outside door of the office is a glass panel door; one pane of glass, which was broken at the lower corner, the piece had been taken out and a man could put his hand through it and easily reach the lock; the door would open by turning the knob; there was no difficulty in getting into witness' room; has no knowledge who has those papers; one voucher was of the New-York Juvenile Asylum; there were bills audited of ANDREW J. GARVEY'S claims; cannot remember any particular bill; those were among the stolen vouchers; only those which had been paid were in those pigeon-holes; there were between two and three thousand of these vouchers stolen.

TO MR. GRAHAM—Was promoted to City Auditor from a book-keeper on the death of Mr. WATSON in January last; was acting County Auditor until May, when he received his appointment; can swear that the packages were there on the 9th of September; did not examine them on that day and cannot say when he did examine them; can swear that they were there from actual, positive knowledge since Sept. 1; thinks he saw them either on the 8th or 9th; thinks on the morning of the 9th he had occasion to look for vouchers; one of armories and of drill-rooms and of adjusted claims of 1869-70; took up three or four packages of each year; [witness describes the packages he examined;] was directed by the Controller to find the one of armories and gave it to him; put it back in its place yesterday. [Witness was cross-examined at great length as to the particular packages he examined, and stated that all he examined on the 9th were now in the office.] Cannot swear of his own knowledge what the contents of the other papers in the packages were; that he did not examine, but he knows they were there; only took out the bills of KEYSER; don't know why they were wanted; KEYSER was in the office; did not hear him say that the accounts purporting to be his were not correct; thinks STORMS was present as well as KEYSER and the Controller, and some other gentlemen; does not know who they were; has not seen them since; thinks the papers taken out were given to O'CONNELL, a clerk; the Controller told him to give them to him; he left at five o'clock P. M. on the 9th; left REGAN there; got there on Monday morning about ten o'clock; first spoke to CARROLL, a clerk; he did not speak of the robbery; don't remember who did; did not see any blotting-paper over the broken glass; first examined his own drawers and found they were all right; then missed the vouchers; the contents of thirteen pigeon-holes had been taken; they would fill two bushel baskets, probably more; has no idea how long it would take to burn such a mass of papers in a kitchen range; don't think it possible it could be done in from thirty to sixty minutes; the last time he saw the papers was after the injunction had been issued; nothing was done to make their custody more secure, after the charges had been made against the Department.

Direct resumed—The bundles were about nine inches thick; two closets had been opened; all the contents were not taken; the majority of 1869 were taken.

WILLIAM MURPHY, sworn: Is night watchman of the Controller's office; was in the office at six o'clock P. M. on the 9th inst.; the janitor, REGAN, may have been there after six o'clock, and some of the clerks; locked the iron door at seven o'clock; it leads to the Auditor's Department; locked the wooden door and put the keys in his pocket; CHARLES O'CONNOR was there writing, and remained till two o'clock in the morning; no one else was there; the outer door was locked; remained there all night, and went out twice, once about eight o'clock, and HALCH asked him what time he was going away, and he said six o'clock in the morning, and he said, "When you go put down the latch;" went out again about ten o'clock, and let the clerk out at two o'clock; left at six o'clock through the iron door, and locked it; there was no one there at that time; during the night is generally in the County Bureau, the large room; was awake all night except a nap for about a couple of hours, about two o'clock; there was no hole in the glass when he left at six o'clock; he must have seen it if there had been; discovered the robbery about nine o'clock Sunday night; first saw that the stick was gone which was placed against the door; went in by the iron door, the catch was so fixed that the door would not fasten; then saw the hole in the glass door and reported it to Mr. REGAN, the assistant janitor; knew nothing about the closets until Monday; about 9 o'clock Sunday morning saw HAGERTY going up stairs with papers in his arms, and HAGERTY stumbled going up; one fell and he stooped and picked it up; they looked like bundles of papers; cannot swear what they were; asked Mrs. HAGERTY if she knew anything about those papers, and said if she did she had better tell, as she would be arrested anyhow, and then she must tell; she said it would be time enough when she was arrested.

TO MR. GRAHAM—Belongs to no political association that favors O'BRIEN'S election as Senator; belongs to the Connolly Association of the Fifth Ward; was not one of those who proposed to get up a monster demonstration to indorse Mr. CONNOLLY; heard it spoken of at the meetings; made the affidavit at Mr. BEACH'S office day before yesterday; it was prepared and he signed it; was there from twelve o'clock at noon until eight o'clock; did not suspect MARY CONWAY until Friday night, and spoke to her on Saturday; is positive it was Saturday; had heard of a reward of $1,000 being offered for the detection of the thieves; saw a piece of blotting paper over the hole in the door at nine o'clock in the morning; at night it was torn away; thought a clerk had broken it and pasted the paper over it; it was not broken at six o'clock in the morning; did not see it at that time whether it was broken or not; if it had been broken at night he must have been asleep, but no one could come in and steal the papers without his knowing it; there was broken glass inside the door on Sunday night; they were not newspapers that HAGERTY had in his arms when he was going upstairs; the papers were only on one arm, his left arm; thinks he told Mr. STORMS on Monday of his having seen HAGERTY; witness had been generally suspected of this robbery.

RICHARD A. STORMS called and sworn: Was Deputy Controller until last Saturday afternoon; there were warrants and vouchers in the closets of the office of various kinds [witness describes the nature of these vouchers;] cannot say what were in the closets on the Friday or Saturday before the robbery; first heard of it on Monday morning; Mr. LYONS reported to him that the closets had been broken open and the vouchers stolen; saw the hole in the glass of the door; saw no paper on it; the closets had been forced open.

TO MR. GRAHAM—Had not looked into the closets for a week before; the pane of glass had been cracked for several months.

CHARLES O'CONNOR called and sworn: Is clerk in the Controller's office; was not there between three o'clock Saturday, 9th, and Monday morning; was there writing until two o'clock in the morning, but don't recollect what night it was; no one came into the office; it was last Saturday that he left, at three o'clock in the afternoon; he made a mistake as to the day.

MARY CONWAY called and sworn: Knows the prisoner; lived with Mr. HAGERTY in the Court-house; on the 9th, 10th and 11th of September he lived on the top floor with his family; there was a parlor, bedroom and kitchen; lived there fourteen months; did the cooking for the family; slept in the middle room, on the north side of the building; got up at half-past six or seven o'clock Sunday morning, the 10th; a child slept with her of Mr. HAGERTY'S; Mrs. HAGERTY came in and said it's too early to get up yet—and witness said, as she was up she would dress herself; told Mrs. HAGERTY there was a knocking down stairs, as though it was at the Controller's door; unlocked the door and went down-stairs, and saw CHARLEY BALCH knocking at the Controller's door, and saying, "MURPHY, are you there?" afterward saw BALCH holding the door open, and saw HAGERTY come out with bundles of papers in his arms and take them to his bedroom; it was the door at the foot of the stairs in which the glass is broken; the bundles were tied with pink tape or ribbon; saw another man dressed in gray clothes, with another bundle of papers, go into HAGERTY'S room; he then went down-stairs with a bag filled with papers, or appeared like papers; BALCH met him down-stairs, and said, "Come this way;" did not see the man's face; knew it was BALCH by his voice when he spoke. [Witness proceeded to describe the burning of the papers, as already stated in her published affidavit.] Three or four pailfuls of partially burned papers were taken out of the range and emptied on some ashes upstairs.

The remainder of the testimony was only a repetition of the affidavit. An adjournment here took place until 11 o'clock Monday morning. MARY CONWAY was sent to the House of Detention.

Penalties for Stealing Public Documents.

The laws bearing upon the stealing of public documents are very explicit and severe, and are as follows:

"Whoever shall be convicted of having stolen and carried away any record, paper or proceeding of a Court of justice, filed or deposited with any clerk or officer of such Court, or any paper, document or record filed or deposited in any public office or with any judicial officer, shall be adjudged guilty of larceny, without reference to the value of the record, paper, document or proceeding so stolen, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a State Prison not exceeding five years, or in the County Jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"Every officer having custody of any record, paper or proceeding specified in last section, who shall steal or fraudulently take away or withdraw or destroy any such document or paper filed or deposited with him, shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in a State Prison for a term not exceeding five years."

"If any carrier or other person to whom any goods, money, right in action, or any valuable personal property or effects shall have been delivered to be transported or carried for hire, shall, without the assent of his employer, take, embezzle, or convert to his own use, or make away with, or secrete with intent to embezzle, or convert to his own use such goods, money, right in action, property or effects, or any of them in the mass as they were delivered, without breaking the trunk, box, package, or other thing in which they or any of them shall be contained, and before delivery of such articles at the place or to the person entitled to receive them, he shall, upon conviction, be punished in the same manner as if he had taken, embezzled, converted, or secreted such goods or other personal property, after breaking the trunk, box, peck, or other thing containing same, or after separating any of them from the others."

Proposed Attempt to Prove an Alibi.

MARY CONWAY in her affidavit distinctly says that HAGERTY told her that "he was going to Saratoga with HANK SMITH, and would be home on Thursday or Friday." She adds that he did go to Saratoga just after the theft of the vouchers and returned on Wednesday. Police Commissioner SMITH positively asserts that he was in Saratoga from Sept. 4 to the 13th, and neither saw, heard, nor knew anything of HAGERTY during the time. Yet it is reported that an attempt will be made on the part of the prisoner's counsel to prove an alibi.

Mrs. Hagerty Still in Custody.

Mr. JOHN GRAHAM, District-Attorney GARVIN and Ex-Judge BARRETT, yesterday afternoon had a consultation in regard to the disposition of the case of Mrs. HAGERTY. It was proposed that she should be discharged from custody, but this was not done. Mrs. HAGERTY spent the night at Essex Market, and what will be done in her case remains to be seen.

More About Edwin Hagerty.

EDWIN HAGERTY was born at Milford, Penn., and from early youth was a wild and rough character. He ran away from home several times to drive on the Delaware and Hudson Canal. He served a partial apprenticeship in a printer's office at Milford, after which he came to New-York as a market boy. At Milford, where his mother and two sisters reside, he is reported to be worth $200,000. He is the reputed owner of several up-town City lots. His arrest has caused much excitement among his friends in his native town.

The Search for the Stolen Vouchers.

Considerable surprise was felt yesterday at the apathy of the Police in not making a search for some trace of the missing vouchers in the apartments occupied by HAGERTY in the new Court-house. It was not until after a TIMES reporter had made a cursory inspection of the ash-pile in the loft adjacent to HAGERTY'S room, and had obtained some pieces of charred and blackened paper, that the idea occurred to the officials that important evidence might be found in the ashes, and that any effort was undertaken for a thorough examination of them. Judges Ledwith, Barrett and Beach, Ex-Mayor Havemeyer, Connolly, and several members of the committee of seventy had taken a look at the ash-heap. Men were detailed to rake it up, and every bit of burnt paper was carefully removed to the Controller's office. It was apparent that most of the papers had been burned in a solid mass, and that the air not having got to those on the inside they had become carbonized, instead of turning to ashes. These pieces which were secured by the TIMES reporter revealed the writing and printing quite plainly to the naked eye. Many of the papers which were gathered under the Controller's directions were held together by metal fasteners and by rubber bands, which seemed to have partially melted. This conclusively showed that they were the remains of official documents, but of what particular character could not be defined. Mr. CONNOLLY felt certain that they were the embers of the missing vouchers, which HAGERTY and BALCH are charged with having stolen. A large number of persons called to examine the burnt papers at the Controller's office yesterday afternoon, and viewed them with a great deal of interest. Prof. DOREMUS, who said that he had been spoken to about them, gave them a close inspection, but decided that the papers could not be restored to their original shape. He looked at them very closely with a microscope, and numerous words and figures could be deciphered, but they were too disconnected to be of any great importance.

AT THE CITY HALL.

A Quiet Day—A Special Meeting of the Supervisors to be Held—Wonderful Gayety of the Mayor.

Unusual quietness reigned in and around the City Hall yesterday. The Court of Special Sessions absorbed all the politicians who could spare time to listen to the examination of the voucher robbers, and several of the heads of Departments, and not a few of their clerks, were also there. Deputy-Controller GREEN called at the Court-room on his way to the office, and the Controller spent nearly the whole morning there. There was not many callers at the Finance Department yesterday. Dr. DOREMUS, who, it appears, has been consulted in regard to the remains of the destroyed vouchers, called on Mr. GREEN during the afternoon and inspected the little box of cinders, but he did not appear very hopeful of being able to do anything with them. Dr. DOREMUS also called at the Mayor's office, but did not see Mr. HALL. During the morning the Deputy Controller dispatched the following letter to the Mayor:

SEPT. 21, 1871.

Hon. A. Oakey Hall, Mayor, and President of the Board of Supervisors:

DEAR SIR: I understand that the Board of Supervisors, at their last meeting, adjourned to meet at the call of the President.

I would request that said Board be convened at the earliest possible date to receive communication from this Department, transmitted to the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors yesterday relating to the TAX Levy of the taxes for the year 1871.

Respectfully yours,

ANDREW H. GREEN,
Deputy Controller.

The subcommittees of the Joint Investigating Committee were hard at work all day, but no meeting was held, nor was the probability of one announced.

About noon a deputation of reporters, twenty strong, waited on the Mayor, who appeared to be profoundly immersed in studying a large printed paper. "Ah," said he, "glad to see you. Why don't you come oftener and stay longer! Well, what is the news? I'm always glad to see newspaper men to know what is going on." Here a reporter remarked that he had called for the special purpose of obtaining news. "Well," said the Mayor, "as you know nothing and I know nothing, and as two negatives make an affirmative, why, we ought to be able to get at something. Let us see how is it as X Y is to Z, so is Z to what?" "That's not easy to C," answered a sunning reporter, with great promptitude. "Very good," said the Mayor, "very good indeed; put that down." The Mayor now condescended to talk about business, and that he had received a letter from the Finance Department, asking him to convene the Board of Supervisors to consider the Tax Levy for 1872: "but," said the Mayor, "I had already issued a notice for a meeting of the Board of Supervisors on Monday next. It was not, however, to consider the TAX Levy, but to pass a resolution giving the Joint Investigating Committee power to send for persons and papers, as is provided for in section 1, chapter 100, of the Laws of 1866. However, when the Board meets the two subjects can be disposed of together. You are invited to attend a meeting of the Tammany Society." The reporters, who were just leaving the room, stopped. "Ah, not you," said his Honor, showing a printed invitation. "Good morning."

The Mayor has recently assumed an unusually gay, affable and jaunty manner, but it is apparent to those who know him that this is all assumed. Usually Mr. HALL seems to be entirely preoccupied with business; now he enters his office by the public door, throws open his private room, and receives every one that thinks proper to call on him. One thing is very apparent. The string of politicians that used to call every day, and throng his ante-room for hours, are no longer to be seen. They scent coming danger, doubtless, and feel that the Mayor's power has departed, and that it is time lost to court his good opinion.

Eighteenth Ward Anti-Tammany Meeting.

A large meeting of the Anti-Tammany Democrats of the Eighteenth Ward was held at No. 210 Avenue C, last night. The following officers were elected: JOHN DUGGAN, President; JOHN MULLEN, Vice-President; JOHN SHERLIN, Secretary, and THOS. MCLAUGHLIN, Treasurer. After the meeting, which was a very enthusiastic one, was called to order, Mr. THOS. FERLEY addressed the assemblage at length upon our present corrupt Municipal Government. He condemned in the strongest terms the infamous Ring, and particularly Mr. A. OAKEY HALL and Mr. PETER B. SWEENY. He spoke of HALL and SWEENY as the tricksters of the Ring, and the men who planned the wholesale robbery of the City Treasury. Mr. FERLEY also alluded to the Mayor and the Commissioners of Parks as the most notorious political renegades in the country. A witty allusion was made to Mr. SWEENY'S unparalleled generosity in giving his personal security for the funds to pay the wages of the laborers on the public parks. The object, he said, was very apparent, but he trusted that native Irish shrewdness would detect the manœuvre. Mr. FERELY also asserted that he believed TWEED and CONNOLLY to be innocent, and he trusted that events would justify his assertions. HALL and SWEENY were, in truth, the guilty parties, and he hoped that in a few days the Mayor would be arrested, and that SWEENY would not be in a position to defend his friend by reason of his own incarceration. Mr. JOHN J. BRADLEY came in for a portion of Mr. FERELY'S condemnation with the rest of the Tammany Ring.

Resolutions were passed strongly indorsing the action of Ex-Sheriff JAMES O'BRIEN in the present Municipal difficulties, and in favor of supporting Mr. O'BRIEN for Senator from the Seventh District. Subsequently, the following resolution was appended to those above stated:

Resolved, That PETER B. SWEENY, J. J. BRADLEY, his brother-in-law, and ABRAHAM OAKEY HALL are vile conocottionists, combined together in one Ring for their own infamous ends, and that we will use our most strenuous endeavors to beat that Ring at the ballot-box.

The meeting was very largely attended, was characterized by the utmost enthusiasm, and adjourned at a late hour.

The Committee of Seventy.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your views, editorially expressed today, hit the right nail on the head in the matter of the Committee of Seventy. That Committee is too large to act with the promptness demanded by the occasion, and no committee can in any event act with the directness and force which an unhampered, individual will can do. Let the Committee of Seventy appoint a man like Gen. BARLOW as their executive agent, to act in his discretion, untrammeled by any but general instructions; and let them then appoint for him two of the best lawyers in the City as advising counsel. They will shall have abundant work left for them to do as a sort of legislative body directing events. Gen. BARLOW has the confidence of the public. He is known to be a man of honor, of force of character, of working power, of ability and of pluck.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Sept. 22, 1871.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

If the Committee of Seventy, as you suggest, would get honest mechanics and contractors to come forward, who have had dealings with the Ring, as in the case of G. L. SCHUYLER, a mass of evidence would be collected that would be irresistible. The misfortune is, the guilty principal will escape, while the catspaw has to suffer. HAGERTY is better fitted to turn state's evidence, and tell at once who his prompters were. All can guess, and are at no loss to spot the man or men who were the prime movers of this felony of these vouchers. Where did Auditor WATSON, with his $7,500 per year, get funds to build his mansion, corner of Forty-second-street and Madison-avenue? Out of SCHUYLER'S bill of lumber, $60,000!

MORE LIGHT.

THE GERMAN DEMOCRACY.

Meeting of the German General Committee—The Position of the German Democrats—Corruption Denounced.

The German Union Democratic General Committee held a crowded meeting at the Teutonia Assembly Rooms, the lobby of which, some time before the opening of the proceedings, was crowded by the leading men of the German Democracy, all engaged in an earnest discussion, and, from their talk, it was apparent that some important matter touching the future course of the German Democracy in reference to the approaching campaign and the war against the Tammany Ring was to be discussed. It was understood that among other things some decisive action would be taken in reference to the address of the German Republican Central Committee to the German Democracy of this City, previously published in the TIMES.

The meeting having been called to order, Alderman SCHLICHTING took the chair.

Mr. MAGNUS GROSS, Chairman of the Executive Committee, submitted a report embracing the resolutions printed below. Mr. GROSS prefaced his report by alluding to the pending crisis, in language tending to encourage the Germans to loyal and united action. He alluded to the circumstance that he himself belonged to the City Government, and that he represented two different Departments, and he was, on account of their honest and economical management proud to be a member of two Departments. If frauds had been committed in other Departments then those guilty of fraud were in the hands of justice, and justice should be rigidly meted out to them. He read the following resolutions:

Whereas, Grave responsibilities and dangers rest upon the entire Democracy of the City and State of New-York in consequence of the perjured charges and pending trials against certain officials; and

Whereas, A lamentable confusion and demoralization have seized the once courageous Democratic masses of this City by reason of which they are threatened with complete dissolution; and

Whereas, The revision of the City charter and the nomination (desirable and unavoidable to that end) of capable and incorruptible candidates for the Senate and Assembly in a measure already expressed; therefore be it

Resolved, That we urgently recommend to the respective Ward Committees of the German Democratic Union Party, the immediate organization of the Senatorial and Assembly districts, as well as the drawing to said district organizations of all those German voters who, free from party party considerations, are ready to unite for the reformation of our City Government and the purifying and elevating the character of the State legislature.

Resolved, That the co-operation of the German-American element being desirable in the work of reform expected from the next Legislature, and it being the wish of all well-meaning citizens in the Senatorial and Assembly districts numerously or overwhelmingly inhabited by German voters, that capable and upright candidates of pure principles and determination to defend its sacred honor, to cast everything that is unclean and blamable, from the political arena under which a once mighty and honored political organization degenerated, more and more, into a close corporation.

Resolved, That the German Democratic Union Party, being at this moment the only political body in this City which is not rent by internal divisions, does hereby declare its readiness to come to an understanding with other Democratic organizations for the purpose of uniting the Democratic voters, and of sending in common a delegation to the Democratic State Convention—an appeal which is bound to be answered by every sincere Democrat who comprehends the present situation, and who is desirous of averting the perils threatening his party.

Resolved, That in case a union of the Democracy of the City of New-York for the purpose of sending a delegation to the Democratic State Convention shall not be accomplished, the German Democratic Union Party will send a full delegation to Rochester.

Resolved, That so long as the Democratic Party of the City of New-York is not reorganized and united either in accordance with the sense herein before expressed, or under the authority of the Democratic State Committee, the German Democratic Union Party will maintain an independent position.

Resolved, That, while we shall give our full support to every earnest and sincere reform movement in City affairs, we, as the associates, do remind our Democratic fellow-citizens to adhere to the great principles of their party, and to be on their guard not to fall, in the present excitement and confusion, a victim to a ruse to a party which has retreated, from above and from below, in the midst of lawless thieves and of public morals and of corrupting the public conscience.

Resolved, That the better to express our views in these resolutions, we have to request our Democratic fellow-citizens to address to the undersigned, as members of the executive committee of the German Democratic Union Party, their views and suggestions, and we agree with a kindred spirit; and, for the purpose of a further understanding we charge the Executive Committee with the appointment of a conference committee of five to discuss the points raised in said address, and to effect, eventually, common action in City affairs of all German voters.

Resolved, That we respectfully request his Honor the Mayor of the City, who has, by virtue of a state law, proceeded to regulate the election districts a few days ago, to act in the appointment of election officers not only in a non-partisan manner, but also to fill these offices with conscientious and upright citizens guaranteeing a thoroughly fair election, and thus to render to the Democratic Party the greatest service, and to the whole country one of the leading guarantees of this community's best interests.

Mr. MAX GOEBEL spoke against the adoption of these resolutions, because they did not positively say whether this organization was to continue to act under the banner of Tammany Hall or not. He believed that if Tammany Hall again should be successful, it would amount to a victory of corruption and dishonest Government. He further believed that Tammany, by an honest election, would never again be successful, and all true Democrats should repudiate the corrupt oligarchy of Tammany. There was nothing to be said against the resolutions, with the exception that a repudiation of Tammany was not distinctly stated therein.

Dr. MINNI observed that Tammany Hall was not mentioned in the document.

Dr. BERCKMANN argued in favor of the adoption of the resolutions. No objection should be made against these, because it was asserted therein that they will remain Democrats. The independence, he argued, was fully declared in the document. The mother organization, he admitted, was in a distracted condition, which is gone condition at this moment. Those who had been stunning had to bear the penalty; those who committed larceny had to be punished. The speaker in severe terms denounced the prevailing corruption, and regretted that there was no law to make short work with defrauding officers. The speaker denounced in strong terms the movements to elect WILLIAM M. TWEED to the Senate, when was blazoned in the newspapers by the words, "Solid men to the front," sounding like irony, and exhibiting effrontery to the highest degree. He concluded his remarks amid the applause of the assemblage.

Judge GROSS also spoke in favor of the resolutions, which, he said, would be the means to unite all good and honest Democrats.

Mr. MARCUS OTTENBURG also favored the resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

The Twenty-Second Ward Germans Denounce Tammany.

The Germans of the Twenty-second Ward met, last evening, at the Park House, No. 297 West Forty-third-street, for the purpose of discussing the City frauds. Mr. C. SCHNEIDER, President of the Association, read a letter from Gen. FRANZ SIGEL, urging them to persevere in their patriotic labors, and to unite in the work of purging the City Government of thieves and plunderers. Dr. H. T. HOLZ made a stirring speech in response to the resolutions, all of which were adopted by acclamation. The resolutions were strongly condemnatory of "Ring" rule.

TWEED MASS-MEETING.

A Large and Rough Assemblage—Speech of Mr. Tweed—He is Renominated for State Senator.

A mass-meeting and torch-light procession was held, last evening, at the junction of East Broadway and Canal-street. Its object was to indorse the nomination of WILLIAM M. TWEED for Senator and of EDWARD J. SHANDLEY for Register. The square and side streets were filled with people, and fire-works and calc

THE SECOND EMPIRE.

An English View of the Prospects of a Restoration of the Bonapartes.

From the London Times, Sept. 11.

Unquestionably, there may yet be a chance for the BONAPARTES. Revolution never has said its last word in any country, and less in France than in any other. France has just inaugurated what is considered the Third Republic, and is it true that the upshot both of the first and of the second French Republic was a BONAPARTE. But, in the second case at least, the thing happened "because it was impossible," and if the Imperialist Party look forward to a repetition of the same phenomenon, they may save themselves the trouble of speculating on the theories of probability, as the realization of their hopes is more likely to be the result of the chance that, as Napoleon forcetold, Bonapartism, we are told, is "looking up," but that can only be in subterraneous France. In the elections of January and June the Imperialists were hardly anywhere to be seen or heard of except in Corsica, and to that insular cradle of the dynasty it is even now necessary to have recourse to make through the instrumentality of one of the AMBAUDUCCI an opening for M. ROUHER. M. PAUL DE CASSAGNAC, whose faith in Imperialism was not shaken by his long residence in a Silesian fortress, takes his ground on the supposition that the Emperor may again become, as he has been, the peasants' candidate. But he forgets that what endeared peasant rule to the peasantry was its boasted security and prosperity, its promise of peace and order. War and revolution may have arisen in sheer opposition to Imperialism, but the charm is no less irreparably broken. The upset may not be the coachman's fault if the latter made a lucky and skillful driver, and although unfortune might not be a reason for removing him from the coach-box, it is certainly not such a recommendation as should lift him into it again. Moreover, where the priests go there the peasants follow, and we look upon it as a symptom boding no good to the BONAPARTES that, whilst the Bishops of Nantes and Tarbes on his elevation to the Presidency of the Republic, he at the same time allows his clerical organs to launch out into bitter invectives against the Imperial régime. Both the NAPOLEONS did much for the Church; but, to say nothing of the absolute impossibility of any ruler doing as much as the Church thinks it has done, the NAPOLEONS always needed by taking from her more than they had given. The Church dreaded, not without reason, the gifts she was fain to accept, and her gratitude is that of the hapless traveler who receives back his watch as a present from the brigand who has taken his purse, and who, though surprised at the malefactor's unexpected generosity, is not unprepared to find a purpose to hang him on the first opportunity. Then, again, the Church, though she has in France, as everywhere else, her own political predilections, has borrowed a lesson from worldly wisdom, and she acknowledges accomplished facts without reserve. M. THIERS is welcome to her, as was the Emperor NAPOLEON as well as LOUIS PHILIPPE, as much as any other who would not too openly make common cause with her enemies. But she knows that her real enemies since 1815 have always been, and are, those champions of Italian independence to whom she seems now to have irretrievably succumbed. Italian independence, and especially Italian unity, never had any friend in France but a sovereign who was meanwhile to it, the man who achieved most in behalf of what had been the cause of his youth, was a NAPOLEON; and it would be vain to suppose that the French priesthood, or the peasantry who are guided by them, could ever feel any genuine enthusiasm for the Sovereign to whom they are indebted for Castelfidardo and Mentana, the glories of the traditions of the First Empire lead many to fancy that the real stronghold of Napoleonism must be sought in the army, and BISMARCK himself is said to have conceived it possible to use the vast French force which he held captive in Germany as an instrument for the reconstruction of the dethroned Empire. But it should be borne in mind that the military prestige of the Empire has been utterly broken by the disasters of the Second; that, whatever may be said in behalf of the personal courage of the present head of the dynasty, the second generation of the BONAPARTES has not produced a single General; and that, if warlike deeds may be supposed to confer on a pretender the position of the adjutant of Frenchmen, the Duc DE CHARTRES and the Comte D'EU have better titles to the suffrage of their countrymen than any successors of those Marshals whom the First NAPOLEON raised to the rank of Princes of his house. Doubtless the result of a long struggle for liberty in France has been to secure an undue ascendency of the military over the destinies of the country. But, had GAMBETTA'S Generals succeeded in driving the Germans from the French territory, Bonapartism would never again have had any chance whatever in the French Army, and although a tide of feeling more friendly to the Empire is supposed to have set in with the return of the captive regiments, it must be remembered that most of the old military chiefs—BAZAINE, MCMAHON and their comrades—have lost either credit or energy, and that for those who long to take their place the continuance of the present uncertainty is preferable to the constitution of any settled Government.

SALZBURG.

The Imperial Meeting—Summary of its Incidents—Probable Results.

Sept. 7 Correspondence of the London Times.

Embarrassing as the first meeting must have been to all parties concerned after so long an estrangement, both sides must have seen to their astonishment that not only was there nothing to separate them, but that, on the contrary, there was not a subject on which their views were not identical. There are no questions pending for either side, for the Prussian bond-holders of the Roumanian Railway could scarcely be dignified by that name, and disappeared as soon as the matter was looked into closely, as a treaty would have had neither object nor meaning; but still when the Ministers on both sides made their reports to their Sovereigns a wish naturally arose to have a record made. Indeed, the wish to have such a record could scarcely be avoided on this side, for although the foreign policy for the whole Empire is in the hands of one Minister for Foreign Affairs, the policy to be conducted with the Immediate Head of one of the Austrian Ministers-President for Austria and Hungary, who is responsible for it to their respective Parliaments. Neither of these latter had been to Gastein, and although they had been informed of what had passed, neither of them had had an opportunity of making his ideas known and heard, and this naturally suggested a second meeting, to which the two Ministers-President were likewise invited. Thus it was that the original plan of the Emperor WILLIAM to stop merely the night on his way back gradually expanded into a stay of two days. He arrived last night, and is to stop here till to-morrow morning, when he is to go by Reichenhall to Hohenschwangau to pay a visit to the Dowager Queen of Bavaria on her birthday, and then to return by Munich. He left Gastein at 9 A. M., and was expected at P. M., but it was well-nigh an hour later before he arrived. All those destined to meet him had preceded him. Count BEUST, who arrived the day before yesterday, Count ANDRASSY, who came yesterday morning, the Emperor himself early in the afternoon, and Count VON ROSENWART a little later. The part of the old Archiepiscopal Palace used as the Imperial residence is too small to afford accommodation to royal visitors, so the main part of the Hotel of the Archduke CHARLES, situated close by, in the north-easterly corner of Mozart Platz, containing the statue of the composer by SCHWANTHALER, was retained for the occasion. Of course, the usual concomitants of such occasions were all there. There was the guard of honor and its band; the Generals in full uniform, as well as the Governor; and last, but not least, the spectators, to give real life to the proceedings on such occasions. Crowded as Salzburg is at this time with strangers and tourists, you might have expected that all the numerous hotels would have sent forth their army of inmates, but either they did not know of the meeting, or were engaged in making some of those delightful excursions which abound in this neighborhood, for those present formed but a small fraction of the few hundred people who had come to have a look at the German Emperor and his famous Minister. With his proverbial punctuality the Austrian Emperor, attired in the uniform of the Prussian Regiment of Guards, which bears the name of his grandfather, walked across the square opening out before the Imperial residence to the Hotel, where he was met at the door by BEUST. Either the postponers on the road to Gastein, used so much lately, were jaded now at the fag-end of the season, or the clocks of Gastein and those of Salzburg have, as everywhere else in Austria, a constitutional difference with each other, but the famous ones on the turret surmounting the Government Office on the Mozart Place had rung out the peal announcing 6 o'clock, and the big clock in the Cathedral and all the others had in succession struck the quarter before the sentinel placed on the road, coming at a run, announced the Imperial arrival, and soon after two Postchaises came up at a jog-trot. In the first of them was the old Emperor, looking as hale and hearty as ever, attired in the uniform of the Austrian line regiment which bears his name. His appearance was greeted with a hearty cheer, which was taken up and continued until he alighted. The first words he spoke to mortals on the vanities of human grandeur, but you could not help thinking that just about four years ago, on the same place, and, possibly, by a good many of the same people, another Emperor, now in exile in Scotland, had been cheered. The shouts resounded so much the more strangely in this part of the world, in which Austrian feeling is perhaps stronger than anywhere else, and where you would have least expected that the humiliation of 1866 had been forgotten. Could it be that the struggle going on between the German and Slavonic population and the excitement caused by the election two days ago had led to a sort of demonstration? No; a glimpse at those around you reassured you on that point. They cared little, and possibly understood less, about the quarrels of the Guelph and Ghibelline. It was simply the old way of the world; the crowd bowed down before success, and greeted the sun that had risen. You could see this much better an instant later. The Emperor had already alighted, when lo! there came tolling along a postchaise and four, the horses looking even more jaded than the rest. The line kept open for the passage of the carriages had been closed, and the postchaise came to a standstill. While the postboys made use of the open road for 15 s. polished steel-helmets, so deep down that it only showed a gray moustache underneath, rose up, supported by a powerful body, to get out and walk, instead of waiting for the clearing of the road. It was then only that people seemed to recollect that in their eagerness they had forgotten what was the meaning of the whole show. Prince BISMARCK was recognized and cheered as lustily as his Sovereign, when, with the characteristic disregard of obstacles, he made his way through the band, the soldiers, and the crowd, elbowing them right and left, and making as usual the best of the situation in which he found himself. The Hon. Austrian Emperor on the other hand came down and stopped to see the guard of honor march past, and then walked across back to the Residence, greeted by an explosion of royal cheers, which left no doubt about the intention of showing a distinction. The disposition for cheering seemed quite divided, for when, soon after, BISMARCK drove by, the same cheers were bestowed on the dust, got into his carriage to drive off and pay a visit to the two Ministers President, who live in the hotel facing the Residence, he again got his share of it, as did Counts BEUST and ANDRASSY, when they went over to the Residence, and, possibly, by a good many of the same people, another Emperor, now in exile in Scotland, had been cheered. RESULTS.

Writing on Sept. 9, the same correspondent says: "If you ask what the result was, I have reason to believe that it was not so great as Conservative people have supposed it yesterday to serve as a guarantee for the future relations of the two Empires, and for a common policy to be followed in any question which might arise. As I told you in my last letter, there is neither treaty nor convention of any sort made and signed. There is no question pending which could have given rise to such a treaty or convention. There is no act of alliance, offensive or defensive, made against any one; the name of Russia or France, or any other nation, is not so much as mentioned in the record which both sides drew up, embodying the ideas exchanged. This record, showing as it does a perfect identity of views in the general line of policy to be followed, and the principles which ought to guide it, but a document which may be filled out should any occasion arise to apply these views and principles."

SPAIN.

The Royal Tour—Enthusiastic Receptions—An Insult from the Clergy.

Valencia (Sept. 6) Correspondence of the London Daily News.

One of the most successful strokes of policy King AMADEO could have adopted has been the journey he is now making in the Provinces. His correct life and constitutional conduct during the eight months he has lived in Madrid have silenced his adversaries there almost completely. The more the people see of him the more they like him. From the Provinces, however, there have not failed to reach Madrid voices of discontent, arising out of ignorance and misrepresentation. To silence these voices and to remove these prejudices, or at any rate to test the value to be attached to them, the King determined to visit the people in person, and accordingly he started on Saturday last on a trip which will take him about three or four weeks. The Royal train left Madrid at 9 o'clock amid loud vivas from the officers, deputies and public officials who had assembled to bid his Majesty farewell. Gen. CORDOVA, Minister of War and of State, and Admiral BERANGER, Minister of Marine, with the principal officers of the royal household, accompany him throughout. The train pulled up for a few minutes at every station it reached. Their platforms, and far beyond their platforms, were crowded with people, who with each other in demonstrations of loyalty and affection. At many of them the troops and volunteers of the district were drawn up. Wherever this was the case His Majesty descended and passed them in review. At 4 in the afternoon Albacete was reached. Here his Majesty remained the night the guest of the Corporation. The people were all agog with excitement and delight. The bands of the garrison serenaded him during the evening. Next morning (Sunday) the journey was resumed at 7 o'clock. Only a few minutes' stoppage was made at every station till we came to Jativa, where the delay was an hour, and the King entered the town amid a firing of cannon, ringing of bells and the plaudits of the inhabitants. At four in the afternoon we arrived at Valencia, having had throughout the most joyous and enthusiastic reception everywhere, to which was added that of Valencia itself. His Majesty proceeded on horseback through the crowded streets to the Cathedral, where a splendid lunch was offered to him by the Bishop and clergy. It has been the custom in Spain, when the monarch went to church, for the clergy to meet him at the door and receive him under the canopy there. This was not omitted by the humble clergy of Albacete or Jativa, but at Valencia, when the royal cortège arrived at the Cathedral, neither dean, nor prebendary, nor acolyte was present to receive the King in the proper manner. Without a moment's hesitation His Majesty turned aside and directed himself to the first open church he could see—that of the Virgin de las Desamparadas. Here he alighted and entered. Then, remounting, he rode through triumphal arches and a perfect avenue of trees to the old mansion known as the Palace of the Duke of Fernan Nunez, which had been offered by its owner as his residence during his stay. FERDINAND, CHRISTINA and ISABELLA have all at one time or another been the guests of the aristocratic house. Little did they think the rooms they occupied would one day receive the representative of a dynasty established on the ruins of their own.

At a Bull-Fight.

Correspondence of the London Times.

On Sept. 5 the King set out at 6 o'clock to visit the hospitals and houses of charity, of which there are several in this city, with large rent rolls derived from old foundations. In the afternoon he attended a grand bull-fight, given in his honor, and had the infliction (for such it certainly is under any circumstances of seeing eight magnificent toros tortured and slaughtered after the fashion peculiar to the Spanish people. I am happy to say that among the upper and educated classes of Spaniards the taste for this harrowing spectacle is fast dying out. With the common people it is different. They would as soon be without their pan (bread) as without their toro (bull.) "Pan y toro" is as much a watchword by which KING AMADEO is of too gentle and noble a nature to enjoy the spectacle of bleeding and slaughtered bulls and horses which so much delights the people over whom he reigns, but His Majesty considers it his duty, so long as it remains a national custom, to attend it when invited. Were he not to do so he would be taken as an insult by the people who would put it down to every motive but the right one. I will not stain your columns with the details of this great Corrida de Toros. Suffice it to say that when the band struck up the Royal March in token that His Majesty was entering, the whole of the vast audience rose to their feet and cheered him loudly. As each bull was "dispatched" he threw down to the successful espada a morocco leather petaca, containing some choice Havana cigars and an onza of gold, (£3 4s. 8d.) amid the cheers of the people. The celebrated bull-fighter, EL TATO, lost his leg last year through the wickedness of a bull at Seville, which refused to be killed without an extra bit of a fight when it was thought all fight was out of him. EL TATO, after suffering dreadfully, under the unskillful hands of Spanish surgeons, went to England and procured a new artificial leg of the latest improvement. He is now back in Spain, and has made several attempts to get at a espada again, but has had to abandon the idea for fear of lacking the necessary agility at the critical moment. It was so at Monday's bull-fight. He intended to have displayed his skill before His Majesty, but at the last moment he found it too risky. When His Majesty was informed of this, and of the fact that EL TATO was an idol of the people, he sent for him to the royal box. Dressed in the richly-embroidered and picturesque dress of his profession, EL TATO so made his appearance, looking awfully ill, and in pain. Bidding him be seated in a chair by his side, His Majesty began to talk to him in the kindest manner, the people all the while cheering loudly at this demonstration of interest in their "pet." When he rose to depart the King placed a fee of neutral Russia leather, punch in it in bands, containing cigars, and, it was told, £10 in money. EL TATO thanked the royal donor, and held up the pouch to the people, who thereupon became frantic in their cries of "Viva el Rey!" "Viva Don Amadeo Primero!" One man near me, who was evidently a Republican, cried out "Viva la Democracia!" but seeing it procured no echo, cleverly added, "de nuestra Rey!" Thus, "Viva the Democracy of our King!" took the house by storm, and produced cheer after cheer. His Majesty complimented the people by staying out the whole of the "function." As he left the building the crowds in the streets gave him many cheers, and these continued all the way to Grao, the "port" of Valencia, some three miles beyond the city. In the evening His Majesty "turned in" to the Café Teatro del Circo Español, a second-rate "people's theatre." It was densely crowded, and the heat something it even makes me shudder to remember. The delight of "the people" at seeing him in one of their favorite resorts passed all bounds.

THE LATE COMMUNE.

The Refugees in London—Scenes in a Reunion of Exiles.

From the London Echo.

There is no "blood-red rag" over the door; clutches of the "Marseillaise" are not invariably issuing from every aperture; the inhabitants don't wear sombreros, and are moderate in their use of stilettoes and Venetian mantles; yet withal, at a bow-shot from the real British Oxford-street, and at less than a hundred paces from the thriving, but somewhat uncommunistic locality of Tottenham-court-road, a club of the Ex-Governors of Paris—M. THIERS' incendiarism—meet, and propose toasts to Universal Fraternity. To the ingenuous believer in the good faith and infallibility of your "own correspondents," the appearance of the incendiaries and of their council chamber is decidedly unsatisfactory. The latter is nothing more than a small estaminet, fitted for the darker recesses than dining, and a café containing no deadlier machine than a billiard-table. The company are, on the surface, as disappointing as the place. They are for the most part rather of the Faubourg St. Denis and Quartier Latin types than of the irrepressible Bellevue and Montmartre classes. "Echantillons" about the business neighborhood that could be bestowed on them by a casual and superficial observer. But the Communist club deserves more than a mere skin-deep study. Some of its members wielded a dreadful military power; some have done very efficient daily duty for the Insurrectionary Government; others, and these are the most numerous, if I must be admitted, have found themselves stupidly, obstinately—consistently, heroically, for a cause which they cannot define, and would certainly not have supported, had not Parisians led and Provincials attacked it. These various classes of enthusiasts seem to fuse admirably, and produce a veritable realisation of their pet and primary idea—Fraternité. The cordial pleasure between them at not all the political faiths and opinions, but of education, social standing, and natural intelligence. Looking down the broad table set here, in Bloomsbury, in the curiously scant and simple fashion of a little Norman auberge, you shall witness at every minute little conjectures and occurrences of a character simply phenomenal in England. The Ex-Director of Travellers—himself a working jeweler by the bye—is in familiar and bulgyant discussion with a compositor and a chemist's apprentice—whom he is about to "promote," I hear. Further on, a small and solemn doctor—who commanded all the Federals' ambulances and arranged the Federal concerts of the Tuileries, is talking with vivacious energy that would scandalise the Faculty, to a modiste from the Rue Faubourg Montmartre. Here the editor of the disgusting Père Duchêne is laughing with a citizen in a linen jacket, whom I take to be a waiter, but who is a medical student, contributor to the Société, and aide-major of the Communist ambulances. The room is crowded with groups of such heterogeneous composition that an Englishman who had lost no jot of his class prejudices might wash his ears and mumble his head in momentary fear of an explosion. There is no such fear here, and though the conversation is, as a rule, violently political and inflammatory, it is very rarely that one hears one word that might breed a quarrel. On one or two occasions, however, I have had cordial and amicable proof that the "Reds" have not yet succeeded in forming a society after the type of FLORIAN'S Bergeries—wherein RIVAROL longed to see a wolf. The wolf in the Communist fold is generally in the form of a mouchard—real or supposed. On hint of such a presence, the conversation suddenly reaches a strong and vibrating pitch, in which the whole company join. Several citizens at least rise from their seats and apostrophize each other from different sides and ends of the table—one little man alone sinks deeper and deeper into his chair, piping vague ejaculations the while in a weak and wavering treble. It is a matter of some difficulty to perceive the reason of the sudden fury. Everybody wishes to speak at once, and all are too excited to pause, and explain to the outer barbarians the details of the event which "has thrown them out of themselves," as they graphically phrase it. At last I recognized the word "Jew," and "spy." My left-hand neighbor elbows me in a good-fellow fashion, and favors me with a French wink, which is a spectacle to be avoided by persons of delicate nerves. "We must be careful, you know, citoyen," he says; "there is a spy in our midst." But my right-hand companion hears this warning, and is of a different opinion. He rises to his feet, and addressing the whole room in a voice like a low thunder, brings down a volley of applause by these words: "The citizen near me asserts that we must be careful, and restrain the expression of our opinions, because there is a spy in the room. But I say that if we believe this, we show ourselves unworthy of the generous and noble hospitality afforded us by England. Those who know English history are aware that even this little salle à manger is our own castle. Therefore, let us talk as we choose; and if there is a spy in our midst, never fear him, but kick him out." This allusion to England prompted several ex-Generals, Ministers, and delegates to clink glasses with me in token of their gratitude to the Vieux Anglaterre, and I finally succeeded in making them explain that a certain Jew had pretended to be a refugee and destitute, and had been welcomed as such, and that it now came to light that the interesting Israelite possessed several hundred thousand francs, and could have had no other motive in simulating poverty but that of spying out the actions of the Communists. Scenes of this kind are, however, of rare occurrence. Generally the two or three hours passed in the Salle Commune are given to sober discussion on abstract political questions, the exiles being somewhat shy of expressing their opinions on the actual events in France—and in half-a-dozen, at most, modified bandying of harmless pleasantries, from which a Frenchman alone would derive consolation in Hades. The Dictator plays, recites BARBIER'S burning themes, or sings tender old French love-songs with a voice that must have served him well when he bade the regular garrison follow him as he charged the barricades, and who has the appearance of having dropped out of the Vie de Bohème, performs choreographic tempuous anathemas maranathas at "la Respectabilité," and insists on wholly disregarding the evolutions of a can-can character, launches convenience of "Buttons" as an affront to that tutelary goddess of England. A sprinkling of the grisettes serves to perfect the thoroughly Parisian atmosphere of the Club. There are other Communist rendezvous at Islington and Camden-town, but that which is above designated is, on the whole, the most characteristic of the class of men who led the Revolution of March, and will lead others before they die.

PRINCE NAPOLEON.

Points of Plon-Plon's New Pamphlet.

From the London Echo.

Prince NAPOLEON'S pamphlet, La Vérité à mes Calomniateurs, is a very curious apology. It is, moreover, a useful contribution to the secret history of the war between France and Prussia. It shows Denmark to have been the first and Italy the last hope of the Emperor NAPOLEON. We gather from it that so confident at the outset were the Emperor and his Ministers of securing the active aid of little Denmark, that the Prince NAPOLEON was actually named Commander-in-Chief of "the French and Danish land and sea forces," and that on the 23d July he submitted to the Emperor a plan of organization whereby the Danish Army of 50,000 men was to be placed in styled "Chef d'état-major pour les forces de terre Françaises et Danoises," and Gen. SCHMITH "Chef d'état-major pour les forces de terre Françaises et Danoises." On the morning of the 9th of August we are told that the Emperor visited his cousin in his tent at Chalons, and frankly said: "Things are going badly. You are of no use here; a single chance, not hopeful but still possible, remains for us. It is that Italy should pronounce for France, declare war against Prussia, and endeavor to draw Austria in with her. No one is better qualified than yourself for this mission to your father-in-law and Italy. Start at once for Florence." I have written to the King, here is my letter." The Prince started accordingly, and a fortnight later wrote from Florence begging to share his Imperial cousin's captivity at Wilhelmshohe. Prince NAPOLEON'S anxiety to appear to be a brave soldier, and his ill success in getting to the front in three campaigns, are very remarkable.

AFRICA.

The Rush to the Cape Diamond Fields.

The news from the Cape Diamond Fields seems highly satisfactory. The finds, says the Cape Standard, are enormous. A diamond of 120 carats has been unearthed at Du Toit's Pan. Dr. ATHERSTONE, who was one of the first to declare that diamonds existed in South Africa, was present when the diamond was found. A letter received in town from Du Toit's Pan, and dated the 15th of July, contains the following interesting particulars: "The weather has been cold. Ice an inch thick, and the ground covered with a white frost in the mornings. RAYMOND & Co. have started their engine and circular machine just at the back of our farm. The engine is a success, but the sifting machine is susceptible of improvement. The steam-engine created an immense sensation among the Dutch, the most of whom had never heard a steam-whistle before. They crowded round to see that very little work could be done. The next day the party found a 1-carat diamond. There are 30,000 people at this farm, De Beer's, and Bultfontein; and although you see little mention of the finds in the papers, they are immense. I see diamonds from 20 to 30 carats every day. At De Beer's, RAWSTORNE, of Colesberg, and half a dozen others purchased a claim of £110, and in four weeks took out sixty-three diamonds, including some of 17, 16, 8, 6, 4 and 5 carats."

FOREIGN NOTES.

MEILHET, the well-known French singer, is dead. He was aged forty-three years.

Baron HAUSSMANN and M. VANDAL have been appointed directors of the Credit Mobilier. A board meeting was held afterward, when the former was unanimously elected Chairman.

"During the thunder-storm which burst over Paris on Monday evening, Sept. 8," says the Journal de Paris, "the electric fluid struck the newly-arrived elephant in the Jardin des Plantes, and killed it instantaneously."

The Turin Gazette states that the first locomotive drawing an express train, in which was Commander AMILHAU, Director of the Upper Italy Railway, passed on the 27th of August through the whole of the Mont Cenis Tunnel.

The inspectors of the Vienna Police are now undergoing a course of instruction in the French and English languages. They are thus to qualify themselves to act as interpreters between the strangers and the authorities during the Grand International Exhibition which will take place there in 1873.

The discovery has just been made at Marseilles that a large number of forged 25 franc French notes are in circulation. The imitation is said to be exceedingly good, but on the back in the article relative to the penalties inflicted by the Code, the word "Banques" is printed "Bandues."

According to advices which the Nord has received from St. Petersburg, the Turkish Government has sent a circular dispatch to the European Cabinets, in which it requests the abolition of the foreign post-offices in the Ottoman Empire. In Turkey, as is well known, several great Powers have postal establishments of their own. There is a French post-office, a German post-office, an English post-office. The Porte is now of opinion that it can undertake the postal service itself, and hence the notion it has taken in the matter.

An inquest had been held in Jersey, England, on the body of CAROLINE ELIZA PALMIN GEE, an actress, aged nineteen, who died from drinking cyanide of potassium. Deceased, who was about to leave the island for an engagement in England, had some words with her father, a photographer, respecting the cording of her boxes. She rushed from the room where the family were sitting, and saying she was going went to the dark room where the chemicals were kept, poured some drinking water into a jug containing twenty grains of potassium, drank off the mixture, and died in two hours.

According to a return published by the Russian War Office, there are now in the Russian Army two field marshals (excluding the Grand Dukes) and 1,310 generals, whose pay amounts in all to 4,166,668 roubles; 23 of the generals are paid at from 10,000 to 60,000 roubles a year, and 20 of them hold civil appointments. Of the Ministers, the War Minister has the largest salary—15,000 roubles; and the Minister of the Imperial Court the highest—27,000 roubles. The salary of the Governor General of Moscow is 36,000 roubles; of the Governor of Poland, 63,574 roubles.

Some time ago an Italian coasting vessel, the Palomena, M. ROSSETA, master, which had arrived here with fresh tunny-fish, sailed again on her return to Sicily. She never reached her destination, and was supposed to be lost. She has since been found abandoned with her sails still bent but torn, in the Malta Channel, by an Austrian ship, (the bark Riccardo,) and towed to Constantinople. From her papers and money (£30) being found on board untouched, it is presumed that her crew of eleven persons must probably perished in the squall in which she was capsized.

It is stated that some time must elapse before the casting of the commemorative war medals, which are to be made from the metal of captured French bronze cannon, will be completely finished, the Royal Mint being just now so busy with other work that not more than 7,000 medals can be produced daily. The breaking up of the cannon is carried on in the Royal Foundry, from which the pieces are taken to BORDENETT'S establishment, where they are melted and rolled into narrow strips, and distributed in this form to the Mint. As yet only the guards and fusileers corps have received their medals: the soldiers are all to be furnished with them before any are distributed to noncombatants.

Gen. DUCROT has just published a pamphlet about Algeria, and dedicated it to the Duke D'AUMALE in a letter, rather incoherently written, in which, after putting forth his claims to the gratitude of his country, it appears that Gen. DUCROT has ever been a slave to duty; that he was first promoted in Africa by the Duke D'AUMALE, when Colonel of the Seventeenth Regiment of Light Infantry; that on the 30th of November he "broke his sword in the body of a German trailleur," which for a General in command of a corps d'armé seems rather a low rank. He winds up by a graceful allusion to the fact of his having first served under the Duke, and craves permission to place his little book under the patronage of the "former Governor of Algeria."

Workmen are still actively engaged in repairing the monument of the city of Lille in the Place de la Concorde. According to the Monde, the site of this statue evokes some painful reminiscences. In 1793 a restaurant stood on the spot, with the sign of "La Guillotine," and the private cabinets on the first floor were in great request as affording an excellent view of the scaffold in the centre of the Place. On each table by the side of the bill of fare, the waiters used to place a list of the traitors who were to be executed. COURBET (a member of the Convention) relates in his memoirs that ROBESPIERRE breakfasted there on the day when DANTON was guillotined. "True, indeed, some little time after the terrace was crowded to witness the execution of ROBESPIERRE himself. In 1794 the establishment changed its sign to Café de la Concorde, which it retained till its final demolition.

M. CHARLES GARNIER, the architect of the new Opera-house in Paris, has written on the subject of the Vendome column. He urges that that monument should be rebuilt, and the original statue of NAPOLEON I. replaced in the position it occupied during the First Empire. His theory is, that a public monument, no matter what it commemorates, should be regarded as a piece of history, and be held sacred. The smallest decorative ornament, an escutcheon, a crown, a symbol, the minutest detail, has, M. GARNIER maintains, an historical value, and ought to be respected. The Soleil objects to find its history, and points to the initials N. E. (NAPOLEON and EUGENIE) with which the new Opera itself is profusely adorned. It declares that those initials are evidences, not of history, but of flattery, or, at best, of mere architectural embroidery.

The Salut Public of Lyons has received a letter from Paris giving some curious details relative to the death of Commandant DE SIGOYER, of the Twenty-sixth Battalion of Foot Chasseurs. On the 21st and 22d of May he assisted at the taking of the gates of St. Cloud and Auteuil, the capture of the Trocadéro and the Palace de l'Industrie. On the morning of the 24th he was the first to enter the Tuileries garden, and by the promptitude of his action was able to save the Gallery of Antiquities at the Louvre from the fire. On the same evening he distinguished himself in the attack on the Hotel de Ville. On the night of the 25th, while he was making a reconnaissance of the barricades at the Bastile, which were to be taken the next morning, he was seized by a band of insurgents. Being dragged to the Place by those monsters, both his hands were chopped off, and his clothes being saturated with petroleum, he was burned alive. His widow and children are absolutely without resources, but a pension is about to be voted to them by the National Assembly.

The Times of India publishes the following letter: "SIR: Yesterday was Monday—a sacred day of one of the most sacred months, Shravum. At 8 P. M. I had bathed, and prepared myself for the worship of the Deity. My eyes were half shut by the drowsiness of abstraction in Him; my heart was melting before His glory; and my mind, leaving behind the dark and labyrinthian regions of reason, had rested on the bed of belief. I was reflecting gratefully on the various resources of edification, subsistence and pleasure given by His bounty to man! In the midst of such reveries I was startled by hearing a noise like shooting of guns out to see what it was, and was told that the pigeon-shooting Europeans were engaged in the (to us) horrible and disgustful sport in the Sonneri Mehal! How must the Hindoos within seeing and hearing of the shots have been pained by such a feat at such a time! I am sure God has not intended the death even of His slightest creature to be a sport! Death may be a necessity—death may be an accident—but it can never be an amusement. I beg, &c. MAHADEB TATMEDUCKBHOY, A Brahmin. Broach, Aug. 1."

"The commune of Plainpalais, in the canton of Geneva, has the honor," says the Swiss Times, "of counting among its inhabitants one of the oldest men living, not only in Switzerland, but very probably in any country of Europe. His name is JEAN-LOUIS CHEVALLIER. He was born in the island of San Domingo on the 11th of May, 1765; he is consequently in his 107th year. He lived in San Domingo till he was eleven years of age, when he was sent to Bordeaux to be educated, where he remained until he had attained his eighteenth year. He then came to Geneva, and was apprenticed to M. DESIR, watchmaker. At the time of the annexation of Geneva to France, in 1798, he was appointed Secretary of the Prefecture, which post he retained till the fall of the First Empire. From Geneva he was called to Bourg to perform the same duties, until in 1835 he was superannuated at the age of seventy years with a modest pension which has never ceased to be regularly paid to him by the French Government. M. CHEVALLIER is still in possession of all his faculties, except his sight, but his body is reduced almost to a skeleton. Various foreigners who have lately visited him have been much struck by the remarkable clearness of his mind and the retentiveness of his memory."

The London Era mentions some incidents connected with the late Mr. WALTER MONTGOMERY'S marriage, to show that it was one of pure affection on both sides. Miss BIGELOW having met Mr. MONTGOMERY when performing in Boston, (on his return from Australia,) became devotedly attached to him, but her parents refused to sanction their union, having a more wealthy alliance for their daughter in prospect. When Mr. MONTGOMERY came to England, however, the lady soon followed him, with an intension of proceeding to Italy to cultivate her voice, and meeting with her lover, their engagement was renewed, and she became his wife, as has been already stated, only two days before his death. It was Mrs. MONTGOMERY who made two appearances at the Gaiety Theatre as Pauline in the "Lady of Lyons." It was her intention to have repeated this character to her husband's Claude Melnotte, and rehearsals and arrangements were made for them to sail for America on the 7th. The deceased had made a will, but, owing to his marriage, the document becomes null and void. The widow will administer, and when all the property left is realized she will receive half the amount, and the deceased's two brothers the other half.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE FAIR.

Successful Exhibition of Useful Articles—Description of the Various Departments—The Fair a Great Success.

Exhibitions of the products and productions of national industry may be termed the colleges of the world's commerce. Their value as educational media is so great that they can never be too frequently repeated, never too much encouraged by an enlightened Press. No manufacturer can possibly visit such an institution as the American Institute Fair, now being held at the Empire Rink on Sixty-third-street and Third Avenue, without gaining much valuable information. And indeed it may be steadily affirmed that those who can use their eyes intelligently will learn more here in five minutes than they could have acquired in a year of desultory reading. For at these places the exhibitors take a pride in unveiling the secrets of their trades and shewing not only the products themselves, but the methods by which they have been arrived at. It is true that they are defended by patents, but it shows a generous confidence in the integrity of others and a belief in honest emulation which is an enormous advance upon the past. Then every handicraft was a mystery, not to be revealed to outsiders under the penalty of death itself. The bricklayers and the free-masons and the carpenters legend the methods and appliances of their guilds between closed doors and with whispered bated breath. Even now a time or two the great Free, gentlemen present in Himmaboo may upward, and give bright auguries of what is yet to be wrought out, when labor and capital have adjusted their differences for good and all.

The Rink is a capital place for a Fair because it is spacious, very lofty, and well lighted. The skylights, however, are not handsome and have necessitated that decoration which would have succeeded to favorably impress visitors. The amphitheatre, which comprises the department of fine arts and education, has also a "cold" and cheerless aspect. But when this is passed and the spectator has fairly gained the threshold of the Rink his eyes are dazzled with brilliant fields of light and color, and his ears enchanted with superb music. The long Hall presented is an animated one. The great arched trusses of the roof have been wreathed with masses of bright hanging, and the spaces between the meadrels have been decked with frescoes of the finest of all the tinted. Above each is a banner all afire with stars and stripes. Above the outer edge of the promenade, on each side, are also numerous gay flags and bright signs referring to the things exhibited below. At first sight all is confusion, and only two or three things start out from the general mass and fix themselves on the sight. Of these the first is undoubtedly the band stand, which is surrounded by sloping tiered shelves which are covered with dahlias of every hue and tinge, masses of graceful tube roses, bunches of grapes, and other things suggestive of luscious syrups. At night time, when these are lighted, they make a fine display. MATTHEWS has the exclusive sale of soda-water in the building, and exhibits a fine fountain of cream-colored marble built in the form of a Gothic cathedral, with delicate silver-tracery and fretted work. He also shows a fine large ornament, and has an attendant to explain the process. Opposite to his central stand is the large counter where the Philadelphia candy is sold. It is of excellent quality, and only twice as dear as that sold by New-York houses of the same kind. Mother Goose, the queen of sweets, where childhood fondly hovers, occupies a department of the dwelling, where furniture of every description, and utensils of every sort, are exhibited by numberless hands. Among these is an electrical system of ringing bells, which always draws a crowd. There is a section of a house front showing door and window. On each side of the door are electric buttons. The inventor stands in front and points them out. "Now, ladies and gentlemen, if I wish to enter the house, I press the bottom button, (tinkle, tinkle, tinkle from a very sweet-sounding bell high up in the roof.) So long as my finger presses the button the electric current keeps on ringing, and the ringing continues. I remove the pressure, and it stops." "Beautiful! so simple and so scientific, isn't it?" The demonstrator continues: "This second button is a night bell and alarum for medical men. A night patient presses it, and it sounds a bell close to the doctor's ear, (tinkle, tinkle,) and from quite a little bell rights overhead. This middle button communicates with the servants' rooms. I will now draw your attention to the shutters of this window. If a burglar presses either of them ever so lightly he immediately sounds an alarm bell," (tinkle, tinkle,) to the great delight of the audience.) This is quite a feature in the Fair, and whenever the visitor goes he is sure to hear the tinkle of the electric bells.

In the body of the hall, and pretty close in the stand, is the tab.e of the New-York and Texas Beef Preserving Company. They exhibit a variety of pork and cooked ties of their meat, which everybody was allowed to sample as well. This year they are not so liberal, for any genial discontent of many country cousins. A great shrapping fellow, with a bright-eyed, rosy cheeked lass on his arm, gazed at the open tin for some moments without speaking. Its appetising appearance evidently made his mouth water. He neared at the jelly, then looked about evidently for a spoon. Not seeing one, he fumbled in his pockets and produced a huge clasp knife, with an open broad blade, and advanced upon the delicious-looking beef. An attendant ran up hurriedly and parried the blow adroitly with a pamphlet. "You must not touch anything if you please." "What!" said the country visitor, with astonishment on his features, "hain't you giving tastes of this meat?" "No, Sir, we are not." "Why down there is a feller giving away flour." "Very well, Sir, you'd better go and get up some flour." "You ain't going, to give me some taste, my yer." "We don't allow any one to touch our tins, Sir; that's all I have to say." The friend from the country turned away, whispering "I du believe its rotten after all," in a pretty loud tone.

This aspersion was altogether false, for the writer, with other newspaper men, as the privileged body, the Press, had the pleasure of tasting a bit of this meat and found it most daily good, but a positive delicacy, ranking pretty close to boned turkey. It has all the flavor of roast meat, and the pins are full of the most delicious jelly, and no more resembles the preserved meat of past times than the new railroads of COLUMBUS do WILLIAMS & GUION'S steamers. The present price of it is $1 20 for an eight-pound tin, which is yet too much for the poor classes. If the maker, Mr. GEORGE MUNSON, can bring it down to $1, he will have solved one of the problems of the nineteenth century—the most equitable distribution of animal food.

WHITEFIELD'S ale pumps are in this vicinity, and are magnificent objects. That part which has hitherto been made of brass, is here of veel brun, a beautiful brownish red marble, with white mottlings, and this is further adorned by two panels of other marbles, Belgian black and jaune Sienne, a marble of a deep orange color, alternating to pale primrose with fine red veinings. The handles to the pump are of ivory, set in white metal, and the body of the article is of black walnut. This has a very English look about it, but was manufactured in the City from a model of some London maker. There is near it a pretty model of an English oscillatory steam engine with its various motions. The finish of this is very fine, even the minutest parts being beautifully wrought. This was always surrounded by admiring crowds, for these engines were used in the swift blockade runners that in so many instances set our best war steamers at defiance. Yesterday, when the crowd here was at the thickest, the band commenced to play a German galop called "Yardinet," or "The Pride of the Chase," in which two pieces of thin wood are clapped together, to imitate the cracking of a whip. When this cracking commenced, a lady screamed and cried out "Oh! my God, there's going to be another cracker explosion," and this produced even consternation. The laughter was not of long duration, for a stampede in a place so crowded with machinery and heavy objects, would be very disastrous.

Next to the Department of the Dwelling comes that of Dress and Handicraft. The exposure of all eyes is naturally the case of LORD & TAYLOR'S, which is a perfect gem for taste of arrangement and fine bright colors. It attracts, however, only fair eyes. The sterner sex prefer to examine REMINGTON'S beautiful display of breech-loading rifles and revolvers. The Ward Britton gun is also exhibited, also the Whitney, but the Remington draws the greatest crowds. Close alongside is a perfect forest of weapons of every description, including a tool-chest for a carpenter, complete with everything that science and devised up to the present date. Mechanics looked with interest at JOHNSON'S combustible globe-valves, but to the uninitiated they were simply metal tenements connected with plumbing. In this department also, were such things as locks and bright-looking steel-ingots for locomotives.

The Department of Fine Arts and Education occupies the anti-chamber and part of the gallery. It contains many fine specimens of photography, but nothing that could exactly be called a painting. Miss VINNIE REAM exhibits a monumental group in marble, which is a feat of Columbia, which shows real talent, and is infinitely preferable to the feat of LINCOLN. This reveals him, not as genius, should have seen him, with his soul bursting through the ungainly mast of his face, but as the photographers has given him to the world. This was poorly done. The group is entitled "The Sentinel," and represents a female figure

The New-York Times,

DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the hour—uncompromising warfare against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local government. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing schemes of self-interested politicians, and its recent warfare upon the Tammany Democrats has been received with universal approval. It has adhered to the pledges given in its original prospectus, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be truly represented, and their interests faithfully guarded through its columns. Its record has been pure and honorable, and the highest aim of its proprietors is to render it more and more worthy of its past history, and of the confidence which the public repose in it. Two out of three of the original proprietors still direct its policy, and guide it on all public questions. They purpose that the TIMES shall continue to keep clear of all narrow and unworthy influences and cliques, and aim to represent the great body of the people, as distinguished from personal factions. It occupies a perfectly independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation throughout the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a faithful exponent of Republican principles, and advocate with unfailing energy every cause which tends to further the welfare of the people.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential canvass. This department of the paper will be unusually full and trustworthy. Renewed enterprise will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-weekly editions; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

Waiting to Do—Nothing.

What the Committee of Seventy can be waiting for passes all comprehension. They mean to do right, or that we are quite sure; but, unfortunately, good intentions very often end in moonshine. The Committee, from whom we all expected so much, are now sitting before Tammany Hall and asking each other how they are to knock it down. Why, go and kick it over. That is the best way of settling the matter. All the talk in the world will do no good now—the time for talk is past. The Committee of Seventy have resolved and resolved, and discussed and discussed, and wherease'd and whereas'd, until it does not know which way to turn. One man says, rush and such a course ought to be taken, whereupon another instantly decides that it would be sure to fail, and so a gentlemanly dispute is got up, and the whole affair reminds one of a debating society in a country town. There is a great buzz every day, and nothing comes of it. Ought we not to find some egg in the hen-yard after all this cluking and clattering?

The Committee may think that we are impatient. Of course we are, and so are the public. Is it not an outrage that these men, TWEED, SWEENY and HALL, should still be at large—that one should still be able to call himself Mayor of the City, another Commissioner of Public Works, a third President of the Department of Parks? Is it not monstrous that they should be at liberty to make away with the plunder they have secured, and be getting up public meetings in the streets, and stretching canvasses covered with their portraits across our thoroughfares, and vowing vengeance against all their opponents, and getting up the materials for a riot, and nominating themselves for Senators and all other offices? There is no mistake about what sort of men they are. They have connived at or carried out gigantic robberies. They are thieves, and everybody knows it. Their guilt is not a matter of conjecture. The warrants we have published prove it. Their own admissions prove it. Their accusations of each other prove it. The papers which are in the hands of Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN prove it. The stolen vouchers, the burnt papers, the missing bonds, all prove it. The evidence of Mr. SCHUYLER, and of a dozen other witnesses, proves it. Look at what Mr. SCHUYLER swears: he had a bill for lumber against the City of $48,510 44. He was kept trudging about from one office to another for months, and was then asked by WATSON—the Ring agent who was killed while sleigh-riding—to make an assignment of his claims. He did so, received his money, and found the amount altered in the Ring accounts to $468,027. And this is the story which scores of other witnesses are ready to tell the moment one of the thieves is placed in the prisoner's dock. If any merchant who reads this paper found that a clerk had altered a check from $48,000 to $468,000, would he continue to keep that clerk in his employ? Well, that is precisely what has been done by our Ring thieves, and yet no one interferes with them. They go about as if nothing had happened, or could happen. While the Committee of Seventy are trying to devise some bran new device for catching them by dropping a little salt on their tails, they are quietly securing the stolen booty, and laughing at their victims.

Is it any wonder, then, that the public are losing all patience? If the arm of the law cannot reach the thieves, why not let us know it at once? What is the good of this owlish silence and mystery—talk and resolutions on Wednesday, long debate on Thursday, on Friday no meeting at all, on Saturday the nightcap comfortably pulled on until Monday morning, and so forth. If you have evidence, as you certainly have, on which to arrest BILL TWEED, why in Heaven's name don't you send an officer after him at once? See what a miserable farce it is which now goes on. HALL'S paper, the Herald, comes out coolly and says, "You reformers are making a revolution. If you don't mind there will be bloodshed, and it will not be our blood that is shed. You dare to say any more about this affair, and we will have a riot got up, and then look out for yourselves." This is actually the purport of an impudent article which appeared in the New-York Herald yesterday. That is to say, the public are officially informed that if they venture to redress for their wrongs, they will have TWEED and SWEENY's ruffians let loose at them, and in the Herald's own insolent words, "let those who are sowing the storm, beware lest they reap the whirlwind." "They are leading on to riot and bloodshed"—this being the second warning of the sort which HALL has conveyed to the public. Such audacity as this would exceed belief, if it were not exhibited under our very eyes. These thieves and their accomplices not only decline to take their hands out of our pockets, but they turn round and say, "if you don't stop your 'jaw' we will cut your throats." And the Herald is the mouthpiece of their threats, and the people are expected to submit without a murmur.

"Losing patience?" Well, it is quite time that we were. The Ring thieves are sending the laborers of the Departments to dun the Deputy Controller, who has not been in office a week, for the very money which they have stolen. And still we are expected to look on with folded hands. The money for paying the laborers their wages has been drawn by TWEED, SWEENY and their confederates, and embezzled. They now send the men for whom the money was intended, to dun Mr. GREEN, who has no means of recovering the stolen property, and no means of raising fresh funds. B receives ten thousand dollars to pay to C, steals it, and then sends C to a third person, D, who has no more to do with the affair than the man in the moon. How long is all this to go on? Tammany is now a house of cards—push it, breathe upon it, and it will topple over. Is there no hope that the Committee of Seventy will cease to knock their heads together over resolutions, addresses, and other bosh, and clap TWEED, HALL, and SWEENY into prison?

From One Depth to Another.

No later than Sunday last the World was still raising its cracked voice for its employers of the Ring. It had a long article about the appointment of Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN as Deputy Controller. It called Mr. GREEN an "accomplice of CONNOLLY." It sneered at SAMUEL J. TILDEN as a "railway speculator." Ex-Mayor HAVEMEYER was "poor old HAVEMEYER." Mr. GREEN had been placed in office merely to cover up CONNOLLY's delinquencies. But for the fact that no one can be surprised now at any act of perfidy or recklessness on the part of the World, this coarse and brutal attack on Democrats whom its editor was bound by every consideration of honor to treat at least with common respect, would have excited universal astonishment. But as it was, no one was surprised. Mr. SAMUEL J. TILDEN doubtless treated it with contempt, and Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN went on with his duties.

Five days passed away, and another change passed over the World. For months past it, like the Herald, has been swearing that there was "nothing in" the exposures published by the TIMES. It was all a sham. The City Government was the honestest in the universe. It kept on saying this until it lost almost the whole of the little audience it ever had. And now it has turned tail again. Its astonished readers—if their weak minds are capable of being astonished—are informed that "nothing will now satisfy Democratic expectation short of great changes both in the organic structure and the personnel of the City Government." The Tammany chiefs are warned to get out. Mr. S. J. TILDEN is praised for his "astuteness," and Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN for his honesty. The Democrats, we further learn, have been alone in this fight against the Ring. The World, of course, has been foremost in the attack—but nobody else has done anything.

This new line will not make the World more infamous than it was before—nothing could do that; it will not make the editor of the World more despised, for he has secured himself against that possibility by a year of unexampled baseness, treachery, and dishonesty; but it illustrates the truth of the prediction we have always made, that the men and journals from whom we have received nothing but wild abuse and slander for months past would, when the hour of victory approached, jump into the arena, throw up their caps, and vow that they had done all the fighting—that they alone had carried the day. So be it. If the public decide that the World and the Herald are the authors of this warfare against Tammany, and deserve whatever credit may belong to it, it is not for us to dispute their verdict. But at present we humbly submit that the course of these two journals is enough to make any man sick at heart of all the weary talk about the "honesty" and "high character" and "noble aims" of the newspaper Press.

The Tribune's Last Card.

Only three days more intervene before the meeting of the Republican State Convention, and we find the Tribune devoting its whole energies to sowing dissensions in the Republican ranks, and publishing vituperative personal attacks upon life-long Republicans who have the misfortune to hold Federal offices under the appointment of Gen. GRANT. Had the Tribune displayed half the energy, during the last month, in exposing and denouncing the Tammany thieves that it now shows in raking up slanders against Republicans, it might have aided in doing its party and the public a service. Its attack on Collector MURPHY yesterday is a blow aimed, through him, at the great body of honest and sincere Republicans in this City who belong to the Anti-Tammany organization, and who desire to rid the party of those Republican tools of Tammany Hall whom the Tribune formerly denounced, but of whom it is now the special organ. It is designed for effect on the State Convention. Having proved, as it asserts, that the Republican State Committee, together with four-fifths of the Republicans of this City, including such men as Gov. MORGAN, Ex-Mayor OPDYKE, JACKSON S. SCHULTZ, HENRY CLEWS, WILLIAM ORTON, ERASTUS C. BENEDICT and hundreds more of the same class, are all "tools" of THOMAS MURPHY, it proceeds to demolish the whole crowd by fishing up some old charges about contracts, made against Mr. MURPHY by black-mailers during the war, which charges were investigated by the Government at the time and officially declared to be without foundation.

In this dirty work it has enlisted the services of a man whom the Tribune calls "Col." HENRY S. OLCOTT, and of whose great services to his country during the war it has made itself the first and only chronicler. It forgot, however, to mention the important fact that this wonderful "Col." OLCOTT is an old attaché of the Tribune, who enlisted in the service of his country at the beginning of the war, not as a soldier to fight the enemy, but as a speculative adventurer. We happen to know something about the career of this "Col." OLCOTT which, if the game were worth the candle, might serve to adorn a tale; but there is no occasion to go into his past record; his communication in yesterday's Tribune convicts him out of his own mouth of being a scamp. If his story is to be believed, the Secretary of War, Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, whom the Tribune justly calls an "incorruptible patriot," together with the Quartermaster-General, compounded a fraud on the Government, and entered into a conspiracy to screen the man who had committed it. After OLCOTT had gathered "little by little," as he says, evidence that Mr. MURPHY had defrauded the Government in his hat contract, "the papers were sent to Washington, but, to my surprise, no response came." He then proceeds to implicate the Secretary of War, as follows:

"I waited and waited, and finally wrote again, calling attention to the importance of the case, and asking its speedy settlement. I selected fair average samples of the hats and caps and sent them to the Quartermaster-General and the Secretary of War. The former officer finally, on the 26th of February, 1866, wrote Gen. VINTON a letter, and after my going to Washington, and writing and waiting, the order came to dispose of the case—not the customary order to try it before either a military or civil tribunal, but one to the effect that I might go before a Special Commission, composed of Senator MORGAN, Judge PIERREPONT, and, I think, Mr. H. A. HURLBUT, and produce my proofs. * * * * You will imagine my feelings when my application for special counsel to take charge of this case before this Commission was refused, and I was obliged to conduct it myself against Mr. EVARTS and Gen. ARTHUR, who appeared for the contractors."

Here we find a gross insinuation, amounting substantially to a charge that the Quartermaster-General and the Secretary of War conspired to defeat justice and protect Mr. MURPHY, by ordering the investigation to be had before such men as Judge PIERREPONT, Senator MORGAN and H. A. HURLBUT. The public can judge whether this was the kind of Commission which EDWIN M. STANTON would have selected if his object was to screen a guilty contractor. Forced, then, against his will, the over-zealous "Col." OLCOTT says he "went before this special and unusual tribunal and was cut into thin slices by Mr. Evarts." We have no doubt of it—for the evidence showed he had no case—and the only wonder is that a "Colonel" who was "cut into thin slices" by a civilian six years ago, should have the assurance to reappear at this late day to repeat his unproved charges, and to mingle with them base imputations upon the character of that "incorruptible patriot," the dead EDWIN M. STANTON.

But this is not the only nor the worst phase of the exhibit which "Col." HENRY S. OLCOTT makes of himself in his letter to the Tribune. The result of the investigation of the charges against Mr. MURPHY he gives in these words: "The Commission, I was informed, reported that Murphy and Griswold had substantially complied with their contracts, but I never saw the document; nor did I want to." Here we have a man who had utterly failed, before a fair tribunal, to sustain what were doubtless black-mailing charges, coming out six years afterward and publishing in a newspaper copies of the charges presented on the trial, (many of them not even signed,) and coolly telling the public that he "was informed" that the charges were proved to be false, but he "never saw the document, nor did he want to." We submit that, if ever a man wrote himself down, and put himself in print as a scoundrel, that man is "Col." HENRY S. OLCOTT. He says he has "wished a thousand times that a fire would accidentally destroy those infernal papers;" and yet he carefully preserved them both from fire and flood, in order that he might some day gratify his spite against a man whom he could not convict of fraud. He suppresses the result of a trial, and gives only the charges. We leave the public to judge whether or not this is a fair course. Would that the Tribune bore the same animosity to TWEED & Co. which it bears to Republicans who do not wear the Tammany livery!

What We are Coming To.

If HALL, SWEENY and TWEED continue in power for another three weeks, New-York City will be in the position of a mercantile house whose bills are dishonored, whose orders are returned unfulfilled, and whose assets are about to be seized on behalf of its creditors. Bankruptcy can only be avoided by removing the men who have squandered the people's money, cheated its creditors, and dragged the good name of the City in the dirt. The financial dead-lock to which we are approaching is, it must be carefully borne in mind, solely the work of the Ring leaders themselves. They have raised money enough during the past eight months to pay for all the expenditures of the year, and to leave a liberal balance on hand at the end of it. The current balance-sheet of the City, at the present date, may be made out as follows, with a tolerable approach to correctness:

PAYMENTS TO BE MET.
Appropriations at the credit of Departments and sundry accounts.....	$6,000,000
State tax—from the Tax Levy on New-York property.....	5,500,000
Arrears of pay to laborers, school-teachers, &c.....	1,000,000
Current expenses for three months.....	4,500,000
Interest on the funded debt due Nov. 1.	2,500,000
Short bills, known as "Revenue Bonds," payable this year.....	17,000,000
Total.....	$36,500,000
AVAILABLE CASH.
Amount in Treasury.....	$2,500,000
Taxes of 1871.....	21,500,000—$24,000,000
Deficit.....	$12,500,000

This is an exhibit which anybody can understand, and bad as it is, it is by no means so black as the state of the City finances would warrant us in making it. For example, the twenty-one and a half millions due for this year's taxes, will certainly not be paid in full by the end of the year. But the payments above noted must be met in full. Between this and January, 1872, the City will really want about eighteen millions instead of, twelve and a half, to enable it to meet the most indispensable obligations.

But for Judge BARNARD's injunction, the Ring would have gone on renewing their acceptances as they came due, by the issue of fresh "revenue bonds," or they would have increased the permanent debt of the City by exchanging for their acceptances or "revenue bonds" the consolidated bonds of the City and County of New-York. And these are the men who express great anxiety about the credit of the City, and whose apologists call those who have saved the community from hopeless bankruptcy "financial alarmists!" Is there a banker in this City who would touch the paper of a mercantile house that, to his certain knowledge, had squandered every cent of its capital, and was only staving off the day of suspension by a complicated system of accommodation bills which was daily landing it deeper in the mire? Yet this is an exact counterpart of the financial administration of HALL, SWEENY, CONNOLLY, and TWEED, during the first eight months of the present year. And the proof of it is, that the moment the power of getting new accommodation bills discounted is taken from them, the Treasury is left bare, creditors are clamoring for payment, and the stoppage of the firm is imminent. The two millions and a half which remained in the City Treasury on Sept. 14 is all needed to provide for the payment of the interest on the funded debt. Not a cent of it is available for arrears of laborers' and school-teachers' pay. About the middle of October a million and three-quarters of "revenue bonds" fall due. Not a dollar of revenue will be forthcoming by that time, to pay them with, and they can't be renewed while the Board of Apportionment remains as it is. The bankruptcy of New-York City can be averted by mortgaging our property a little deeper. The financial stoppage of the present City Government is manifest already, and in a few weeks will be past all remedy. If our rulers cannot be got out of the way by being put in prison, the Governor must convene an extra session of the Legislature to repeal the charter, restore to the people their rights, and let them be free to regain through the Courts the millions, which, during this and the previous year, have been filched from them by thieves in office.

The Latest Enterprise of the International.

Labor and capital are having a pitched battle in England, upon a scale which has not been witnessed in that country for ten years. The fight began in the great engineering workshops on the Tyne, four months ago. It has been maintained up to the present time with unexampled doggedness on both sides. As stated in a late cable telegram, workmen in various parts of England continue to swell the ranks of the strikers, and a sympathetic movement in Belgium has just ended with the defeat of the employers. The demand of the workmen is for ten hours' pay for nine hours' work. In the beginning of June the employers refused to accede to the ultimatum of the men who, to the number of ten thousand, immediately struck. During the first week of the strike the local unions paid fifty cents, in currency, as a weekly allowance to each of the men on strike. The movement having been indorsed by the General Trades' Council, in London, and by various unions throughout the country, the allowance was doubled in a week or two, and as a number of the men who had private savings refused to avail themselves of the allowance, it was found possible to raise it to about two dollars, in currency, per head, at which rate it has been steadily maintained up till now. At first the employers tried the effect of a compromise. Finding this hopeless, they proceeded to confront the workmen's organization with an association of employers. It was arranged, in August, that the leading engineering firms of the country should make common cause with the employers of the Tyne, and that a fund of $110,000 should be immediately subscribed for the purpose of importing foreign workmen, who were first to be employed in defeating the strike, and were afterward to be distributed among the shops of the subscribing firms.

At this stage, the General Council of the International Working Men's Association appeared in the contest. The agents of the employers had telegraphed from the Continent of Europe that two thousand skilled workmen could easily be tempted to England by the rates of wages which were offered them. Denmark and Belgium were expected to yield the first quota, and to these countries agents of the International were immediately sent for the purpose of warning the workmen of the purpose for which they were wanted. They did not, however, entirely succeed in circumventing the plans of the employers. The Danish Government permitted men to be taken from the Royal Arsenal, and from the "black country" of Belgium came a large number of workmen. Later on, the great German workshops supplied men who had but lately exchanged the rifle for the hammer. It was thought that the men were checkmated, but by and by, the foreign workmen found out that the shops to which they had come were guarded like fortresses in time of war, that they were hardly allowed to stir beyond the walls, and that outside were thousands of determined men, who would proceed to any extremity if the strangers persisted in taking their bread, as they phrased it, out of their mouths. One body after another of the foreigners fraternized with the strikers, and told how they had been entrapped into a bargain of whose nature they were kept ignorant. Successive shiploads of Danes, Belgians and Germans were sent back at the expense of the nine hours' men to their respective countries, amid the acclamations of crowds of artisans who attended their embarkation. The only considerable body of foreign workmen who have remained in spite of the remonstrances and threats of their English brethren, consists of 120 Norwegians. The departure of the rest is rightly regarded as a great triumph for the cause of trades-unionism, and a striking proof of the growing solidarity of labor all over the world.

Great efforts have been made to constitute the Tyneside strike the nucleus of a general movement throughout England. The Amalgamated Engineers form the most powerful trades-union in the world. They have branches on this side of the Atlantic, and are generally quoted as the ablest in administration and most fertile in resources of all similar organizations. The present contest is therefore one on which very much depends. If the powerful association now fighting in the front of the battle of labor be worsted, it will prove a standing discouragement to any similar attempt on the part of unions having more limited resources. Hitherto, their fellow-workmen in the United Kingdom have refused to be tempted to take the place of men on strike. The few who were induced to take work on the Tyne after the contest began, immediately left on learning the true state of affairs. If no more aid can be had from the Continent than what has already been obtained, the fight is a hopeless one for the employers. They will be obliged to capitulate at discretion, and though they will find it still more difficult than heretofore to compete in the markets of the world with the cheap labor of Belgium and Germany, they will have the satisfaction of knowing that the International can help the Continental workmen to strike for higher wages as effectively as it is now aiding in keeping the English workshops free from foreign occupants.

"The Rights of Wit."

Letters to the Press are not always either pertinent or funny, but one has appeared just now that may fairly be called both. A gentleman writes to a London paper a highly original proposal concerning the new science of "levitation." Of this, our readers know, Mr. D. D. HOME is the discoverer and illustrator. Now, "in the legislation of the Lorcians," writes the correspondent referred to, "the propounder of a new law stood with a halter round his neck, to be instantly tightened if the law did not receive popular favor." He goes on to say that he does not think it unreasonable that the propounder of the new science of "levitation" should be placed in a similar predicament. His plan, then, is for Mr. HOME to be conducted to Newgate, where "a perfectly unprejudiced operator, Mr. CALORAFT," may superintend the mechanical details of the experiment. Mr. HOME, being handled by that famous expert in the usual way, can thus give a "test" that must satisfy the most skeptical.

It is reasonably assumed that there need be no more difficulty about going into a trance on a gallows than in a drawing-room, and that, as the spirits are notoriously partial to untying ropes, the halter could at least occasion no inconvenience. The inventor of this pretty device observes that if Mr. HOME will consent to put it in practice, all the world who now regard him as an arrant imposter will at once be converted to spiritualism. It is therefore urged upon Lords LINDSAY and ADARE, as conspicuous disciples of the new philosophy, that they persuade the great prophet of "levitation" to fly in the manner proposed. We second the motion with much cordiality. Such an exhibition would certainly possess fascinating interest. Mr. BLONDIN's would be nothing to it. Moreover, it is recommended by the consideration that in any possible event there would only be room for congratulation. If that fine artist, Mr. CALORAFT, once gets Mr. HOME "on a string," every feeling of professional pride will induce him to keep him there with the usual legitimate consequences; whereas if Mr. HOME "levitates" himself out of the dilemma, a great scientific or psychological truth will be conclusively demonstrated. Thus, in either case, society will be the gainer, and although an individual may suffer, "the world will be more and more."

MINOR TOPICS.

Mr. TWEED thinks that the proper place to meet the charges made against him is in the Courts. The people are perfectly at one with him on this subject, and would be inexpressibly gratified to find him placed in the felon's dock to receive the award of his crimes. Can the Committee of Seventy not seize the opportunity to oblige Mr. TWEED and the patient tax-payers at the same time?

The German Union Democratic General Committee is too much under the influence of Tammany politicians. The resolutions adopted at last night's meeting might, with advantage, have dealt less with the prospects of the party, and more with the objects for which parties exist. If Judge GROSS and Alderman SCHLEICHERLING have not made up their minds to break with Tammany Hall, they cannot be too soon reminded of the fact that the bulk of their countrymen, in common with the great majority of the community at large, certainly have. Party leaders who are also City office-holders, are not likely to be the men best qualified to appreciate the strength of public sentiment. It is well for them to bear in mind, however, that a blunder at the present juncture is pretty certain to cost them their party influence, and their offices too.

It will be observed that a highly-influential movement was organized last evening for the purpose of putting an end to the vexatious and scandalous exactions of the Departments of Buildings. Any one outside of the Tammany Ring, who has of late years had occasion to build a house on this island, can tell a tale of the black-mailing which has been practised so long and faithfully in the Department presided over by Mr. MACGREGOR. Now is the time for clearing out rascals, big and little, and we are glad to see so many substantial citizens added to the working ranks of the reformers as there were at last night's meeting.

The Tax Levy for 1871 has not yet been confirmed by the Board of Supervisors. Until this is done, the books do not go into the hands of the Commissioners, and the taxes which must be looked to for the pressing liabilities of the City, cannot be raised. Mayor HALL is President of the Board of Supervisors, and as it stands adjourned to meet at his call, he was yesterday requested by Deputy-Controller GREEN to convene the Board for the discharge of a pressing duty. It is quite possible that the Mayor's childish resolve to ignore Mr. GREEN may lead him to pay no attention to his letter. In that case, the people will have one more illustration of what it costs to have an empty-pated mountebank at the head of the affairs of a great City.

Elder FREDERICK W. EVANS, of the Shaker community, feels aggrieved at the reproduction in Every Saturday and Harper's of a caricature originally published in the London Graphic. We have no doubt that the editors of our two illustrated contemporaries were innocent of any intention of wounding the feelings of the Elder, but undoubtedly he has cause to be offended. He seems to be a man of blameless life and character, and we hope he will be a little compensated for the publication of the caricatures by the following cordial paragraph which appears in the Golden Age:

"It is difficult to understand why Every Saturday should publish a large picture designed to ridicule FREDERICK EVANS, the American Shaker now in England. Our old friend EVANS is one of the best and sincerest of souls—as honest as the day is long—and high-minded and benevolent to an almost ethereal degree. Moreover, in person (barring a certain unhandsomeness of dress) he is very comely—bearing a striking likeness to JOHN G. WHITTIER, who is a Quaker of the meekalum sort. Nobody can look at Shaker EVANS' portrait without remarking its intelligence, urbanity and sweetness; but nobody can look at Every Saturday's caricature without seeing therein a countenance equally villainous and vulgar. We have no other sympathy with Shakerism than a kick preparatory for each of its representatives as we happen to know, and a determination that (so far as our own columns can do it) they shall have a fair hearing for their doctrines. But we could not be guilty of such a gross act of injustice, almost of malice, as this picture is to a man whose ability and character are not surpassed among the orthodox clergy of Boston."

A respectable carpet-dealer in this City, who resides at Stamford, Conn., says that he has sold quantities of carpets to the City authorities ostensibly for the new Court-houses, at regular prices and without making out separate vouchers in order to get his pay. "But there was one peculiarity about the transaction which made him doubt whether the carpets ever reached their destination. Instead of allowing the seller to send the purchases to the Court-houses, the buyer ordered the carpets to be kept till called for, and, oddly enough, it always happened that they were called for after dark and taken away in carts that nobody knew where.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Non-Interference of the National Government in Massachusetts Politics—Charges of Extravagance in the Treasury Department Refuted—Adjournment of Southern Claims—Action of the Kuklux Committees.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—In the contest for the Gubernatorial nomination before the Republican Convention of Massachusetts, it has been freely asserted that the President and some of the members of his Cabinet were secretly favoring the nomination of Gen. BUTLER, and that the Federal officers in the State have been quietly instructed likewise. Information in the possession of your correspondent enables him to say that such reports are utterly devoid of truth. Neither the President nor any member of the Cabinet has expressed any such preference, and so far as the President and Mr. BOUTWELL are concerned, both have scrupulously abstained from any expression or action inconsistent with entire neutrality in the matter. Whatever may be their personal preferences, and it is well known that the President's would not be Gen. BUTLER, there has been no intimation on their part, either with any Government official in Massachusetts, or with any unofficial person there or elsewhere, which could be construed as expressing a desire for the defeat of one candidate, or the choice of another. The Government officers in Massachusetts have been left free to express their own preferences without superior dictation. It is safe to add that the wisdom of such a course on the part of the Administration is very apparent in this case, and there is the best of reason for believing that it will be followed in other States as well.

ITEMS FROM THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Secretary BOUTWELL arrived here this morning, and was all day immersed in the business of his office, receiving also numerous callers, and being somewhat bored by several hundred white-plumed Knights Templar, who invaded the Treasury in a body. Next week the Secretary will spend three days in Chicago, making three speeches, and then returns to meet the President here the first week in October. Your contemporary of the Tribune having no words of commendation for the Government, must needs resort to petty falsehood to assail it. Its recent agony over the departure of three Government clerks for Europe on public business is a fair specimen of its misrepresentations. The Government is at present engaged in sending abroad the bonds of the new loan just taken. To transmit these bonds in the usual way would cost, for $50,000,000, $12,500 for express charges from Washington to New-York alone, to say nothing of the much greater charges for shipment to Europe. The guarantee of the carrying companies is worth nothing to the Government in a matter of such large amounts, even if the companies were willing to give it. The cost of sending a safe with $50,000,000 and three Treasury clerks in charge of it, to England, is about $1,500, or about one-eighth of what it would be by other means. Moreover, the expenses, whatever they are, come out of the one-half of one per cent. allowed by law for negotiating the loan, and even were they ten times as great, the Syndicate would simply get so much less, for the Treasury is doing this at the request of the Syndicate, and it would save nothing even if it were otherwise.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

PROGRESS OF THE SOUTHERN CLAIMS COMMISSIONERS.

About 7,000 claims have been indexed by the Southern Claims Commission, the aggregate amount of alleged damages sustained being upward of $60,000,000, owing to seizures of supplies, &c., for United States troops, belonging to those claiming to have been Union men during the late war. Evidence has been taken in 400 cases, and decisions arrived at in 120 of them. The Commissioners have the remainder of them under consideration. It is expected that they will report at the next session of Congress 300 cases, with their decisions thereon, together with the testimony, as required by law. Additional evidence is being taken by special Commissioners in some of the Southern States, and it is probable that the Commission sitting in Washington will resume the taking of testimony about the first Monday in October.

APPOINTMENT OF KUKLUX SUB-COMMITTEES.

The full Congressional Kuklux Committee had a brief meeting to-day when the Chairman, Senator SCOTT, in accordance with a resolution adopted yesterday, announced the appointment of the following Subcommittees to take testimony this autumn, and report to the full Committee prior to the assembling of Congress, in the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee. Senators PRATT, RICE and BAYARD, and Representatives BUCKNER and ROBINSON, in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Representatives MAYNARD, SCHOFIELD, LAWRENCE and WOODWORTH, and Senator BLAIR. The Subcommittee of three, reappointed yesterday, were authorized in the event of the refusal of authorities to furnish the desired information concerning finances, taxation, election laws, &c., of the Southern States, to proceed thither and obtain it by such means as they may deem advisable. The few witnesses now in attendance are to be examined by a subcommittee, consisting of Senators SCOTT, POOL and BLAIR. The report of the Subcommittee of Eight, submitted yesterday, made no recommendation to influence the action of the full Committee, beyond stating that the voluminous testimony taken showed that there had been disturbances in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, and to a limited extent in Tennessee, and that the full Committee must determine therefrom the advisability of continuing the investigation.

Disastrous Fire at Greenpoint—An Extensive Chair Factory Destroyed, and Two Firemen Injured.

The Springfield City Caucus—The Matter Miss Usage Ironed.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 22.—The Republican city caucus to-night was large and bodeful for an unprecedented degree. It was evident from the start that the majority of those present were Butler men. At the outset they refused to sustain the rules to prevent fraud established by the Republican City Committee, and elected a Chairman by acclamation. The ballot then proceeded. Twelve hundred votes were cast, while only 100 names were counted. Several hundred Anti-Butler Republicans refused to vote at all, while hundreds of Democrats and Labor Reformers voted unchallenged, and there were numerous cases of repeating. The vote stood 800 for the Butler, against 400 for the Anti-Butler ticket. The Republicans denounce the vote as a fraud, but whether rival delegations will be sent to the State Convention is yet to be determined.

INDIAN MATTERS.

Letter From the Governor of Montana—No Trouble Apprehended This Winter.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The Secretary of the Interior today received a letter from Gov. POPE, giving some general information regarding the condition of Indian affairs in Montana Territory, in which he says that the people of Gallatin Valley now feel comparatively secure from further Indian raids this year, and no further danger is apprehended, unless SITTING BULL should declare upon war on the surveyors of the Northern Pacific Railroad and the settlements. The Governor has succeeded in organizing and equipping a force of about 300 men in the valley, which he trusts will be sufficient, in connection with the troops lately furnished by the War Department, to resist any attack that may be made this year. He apprehends trouble, however, from the Sioux Indians next Spring and possibly this Winter, unless some terms of peace can be made with SITTING BULL and his band.

Celebration at the Unveiling of the Lincoln Monument at Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Sept. 22.—The unveiling of the Lincoln Monument took place, this afternoon, at Fairmount Park, in the presence of 100,000 spectators. The military paraded in strong force. At the appointed time Prof. CHARLES J. STILL, President of the Lincoln Monument Association, appeared on the speakers' stand and made a brief address, explaining that the monument was erected from the voluntary contributions of the people, and that the object of the association being now completed, the work was turned over to the Park Commissioners. The monument was then unveiled amid the cheers of the people and a salvo of artillery from an adjacent hill. The oration was pronounced by Col. WM. MCMICHAEL, who was frequently interrupted by enthusiastic applause. The Knights Templar and military then formed in review around the base of the monument, and the assemblage dispersed.

This evening the monument was illuminated, and there was a display of fire-works in honor of the Emancipation Proclamation, the anniversary of which was this day commemorated.

AMUSEMENTS.

Musical.

HERR WACHTEL'S REPRESENTATIONS.

Herr WACHTEL'S third appearance in this country was made at the Stadt Theatre, last evening, in "Il Trovatore." The impression of Herr WACHTEL'S personation of Manrico was in accord with what might have been forecast from the two performances in which the artist was previously heard. By no means so symmetrical, so finished, or so replete with capital stage business as his picture of Otello, Herr WACHTEL'S troubadour is a far more telling character than the pontiffice. Yesterday's first incident did not promise the pleasurable excitement after events were to cause. In his romance, commencing "Deserto sulla terra," and delivered from the wings, the tenor's voice broke badly, the mishap opening up a sorry prospect of results for greater demands upon the artist as the opera progressed. And yet it was to be written afterwards that Herr WACHTEL has never sung with equal truthfulness of intonation, neatness of execution, and commendable sobriety in ornament, since the season commenced. The Anaide of the first act was rather noisy than remarkable, but the duet with Azucena at the outset of the second was full of contrast, and the "Mal reggendo" ending it, although taken too slow, as was indeed nearly every allegro in the opera, was a very fine dramatic outburst. The close of the second act suffered most from the German proneness to slacken all the tempos, and there was little of the stretto about it as given, but it was full of vocal eloquence so far as Herr WACHTEL was concerned. The performance's air in the second scene of the third act, beginning in the Italian version, "Ah! si, ben mio," was certainly the artistic feature of the evening, if it was not its sensation. Herr WACHTEL'S mezza voce was never laden with more sweetness and color than it was last night, and in point of variety of vocal and depth of expression, his rendering was magnificent. The sensational element, of course, was embodied in the high notes evoked by the "Di quella pira." Herr WACHTEL gave, indeed, the whole air an amount of authority as it is never before been endowed with, but it would be unjust not to note that the two successive high C's taken in its progress were wonderful in their quality, and that their attainment bore little resemblance to a feat, so easily and surely were they sounded. The demand for a repeat which followed, brought interpolation upon Italian words being substituted this time for the German text. It is hardly necessary to say that the enthusiasm of which Herr WACHTEL'S perfotmance had already elicited a frequent exhibition became, at this point, altogether confusing. There was plenty of applause throughout the entertainment, and it was not always dispensed with absolute justice, but the murmurs of approval and the general clapping of hands, were now quite undistinguishable in the hurricane of plaudits and cheers, joined in by the orchestra, the members of which rose to their feet and made the backs of their instruments do duty for their palms. We should gladly, did space permit, dwell at greater length upon the rendering of "Il Trovatore" than we have done. Our attention, however, would still be devoted to Herr WACHTEL, for the general singing and acting, last night, were not conspicuous for their excellence.

Mme. ROSENTI, who was Leonora; Mme. PERL, a very correct and intelligent Azucena, and Herr VIERLING, a mediocre Conte di Luna, were the artists who sang with the tenor and whom he, very naturally, dwarfed. It would be a great satisfaction were affairs more nicely balanced; and if Mme. PAREPA-ROSA, for example, would but sing Leonora, and Mr. CARL ROSA, with the Italian traditions, displace Herr NAUMBURGER with his unlimited good-will and unswerving adherence to German views of Italian music, even Herr WACHTEL'S striking delineation would benefit by the change. To-night that gentleman is to sing again in "The Postillion of Longjumeau."

Life Association of America.

"No other company has ever, in any country or at any time, been so successful as the Life Association (of America) in obtaining business." These are large words, and will perhaps provoke a smile of incredulity among the great majority of our readers. They are, however, the words of Hon. W. BARNES, formerly Superintendent of the Insurance Department in the State of New-York, but now consulting counsel and actuary of the above Association, and who has just issued an elaborate and interesting report on its condition and affairs on the 31st of December last. The report in its entirety, extending as it does over upward of twelve quarto pages of small print, is of course beyond our grasp with the limited space at our disposal, and we must, therefore, confine ourselves to some of its most interesting points.

The "Life Association of America" was incorporated and commenced business on the 18th June, 1866, and had at the close of the year 1870, an interval of only two years, six months and fifteen days, so well succeeded, that, at the closing of the accounts for the year, the amount of risks in force, including bonus additions, amounted to no less a sum than $45,665,740, (or £9,131,148.) The nearest approach to this in point of actual amount is the Economic, of London, which, during the forty-seven years which have elapsed since its formation, stands credited with existing policies to the extent of $44,751,975, (or £8,950,395.) The highest British company on the list is the Standard, which, after an existence of forty-five years, has risks in force amounting to $31,727,005, (or £16,945,419.) The results arrived at by Mr. BARNES are thus summarized: "Out of the seventy-one life insurance companies transacting business in the State of New-York, fourteen only have as yet reached the extent of business or amount of policies in force attained by the Life Association at the close of the last calendar year. The average time consumed in reaching this point by the most successful of the American companies transacting business in the State of New-York was nearly fifteen years, while the age of the Association itself was only two years, six and a half months on the 1st day of January last." This is, indeed, a most remarkably rapid progress.

Mr. BARNES next proceeds to give the statistics with respect to German, Austrian, and German-Swiss life insurance companies as compared with the "Life Association of America." And at the very outset of this table we are met by the astounding fact that the institution hitherto regarded as the largest life office in the world—the Gotha Life Insurance Bank—has been actually overstepped, after an existence of no less than forty-two years, by its infant competitor. The existing risks of the Gotha Bank amounted at the close of 1869 to $45,529,892, while those of the Life Association amounted to $45,665,740. The total number of German life assurance companies in existence at the close of the year 1869 was thirty-nine, and the total amount assured by them $926,922,221 sc.—the result of 570 years of corporate growth, considering the whole thirty-nine institutions as one company.

In another table Mr. BARNES gives a statement showing the relative gross increase in 1870 of the amount insured, or risks in force. In this list his own office stands third on the list, with an increase of $20,397,730, (or £4,065,546,) the only two offices in the whole of the United States presenting a claim to precedence in this department being the Equitable and Mutual, both of New-York City. This list, excluding the New-England Mutual, of Boston, from which no returns have been received, gives a total gross increase of new business during the past year in the seventy companies transacting business in New-York State of $568,016,818, (or £113,603,363)—"or more than was transacted in all the world besides." At the same time Mr. BARNES draws attention to the fact that "endowments, long and short, constitute a larger percentage of American than of European business, and the short endowments soon past off a company's books by normal termination." With respect to the (new) German and French business Mr. BARNES remarks that "the gross increase of the new business of the Life Association is more than one-half of the whole thirty-nine German companies, covering a population nearly double that of the whole United States," while, of the whole of the ten French Stock Companies, he finds that, "aside from the annuity and tontine transactions, they write yearly only about one-third as many life and endowment risks than the 'Life Association of America,' while of this, the Generali and La Nationale transact more than half the whole business."

Another important branch of Mr. BARNES' return relates to the average amount of each policy in force. The Association heads the list with an average policy of $6,864, (£1,171,) followed by the Equitable, of New-York, $3,991, (£792,) the Mutual Benefit, $3,560, (£702,) and the Mutual, of New-York, $3,396, (£679.) The latter companies carry, it appears, "much larger risks on a single life than the Association—at least double, and probably more than double, the amount." Upon this point Mr. BARNES observes that "policies covering large amounts are generally considered as the 'first-rate' room as being practically better risks than smaller policies, principally for the reason that a man of means can escape contagion, travel in case of necessity, and employ the best medical skill and suitable and appropriate remedies for any disease with which he may be attacked, than the same amount insured in the humbler classes; although the mortality may be less in cases of large policies, yet the mortuary record will, doubtless, show occasional and more violent deflections in the course of actual deaths, as the lesser number of deaths would not be so well graduated as the larger number." Into the discussion of this question we have no space to enter; we will merely quote, in connection with this point, the following passage from Mr. BARNES' report, simply to show that large policies are, after all, pretty safe transactions. The passage we refer to runs thus: "In the British companies the high average policies are mainly due to reversionary dividends made by the older and more successful companies. The Equitable is 126 years old, the Law Life 67, the Equity and Law (mainly for lawyers) 26 years and the Rock 64 years old. The London Life Association has nearly quadrupled its oldest policies by reversionary dividends; the Equitable and Standard have about trebled the amount of their oldest policies; the Scottish Amicable, the Atlas, the Rock and others have nearly doubled the amount insured under their first policies."

One word may be allowed with respect to small policies. Mr. BARNES informs us that "the average policy in German companies is the smallest of any of the life insurance nations, being only $654 82, (i. e., about £130.) This small average almost closes them with industrial policies in other countries; but their persistency exceeds that of the average policies in the United States. The Life Association has many German trustees, directors, and policyholders; the transplanted German-American, however, readily falls into the habit of taking heavy policies in this country." (America.)

But our space is exhausted. We must, however, find room to congratulate Mr. BARNES on his restoration to health, to thank him for his very interesting report, and to wish him a long and successful career in his new sphere of operations.—London Monitor.

CUNDURANGO.

The wonderful remedy for cancer, syphilis, scrofula, ulcerous and other blood diseases.

DR. F. T. KEENE having just returned from Ecuador and brought with him a quantity of the genuine cundurango bark, secured through the official recommendation and assistance of His Excellency the President of Ecuador and the Government of that Republic, we are prepared to fill orders for it to a limited extent, and at a price one-quarter of that which the cost of the first very small supply compelled us to charge.

Spurious articles are now advertised and sold as cundurango. We have, at considerable expense, and with the co-operation of the authorities of Loja, Ecuador, the province where the bark grows, so directed the channel of our supply as to insure that only the genuine shall be sold by us, and we particularly call the attention of the public for their protection to this fact.

FRIDAY, Sept. 22—P. M.

The Wall-street markets are less excited than yesterday, although the sales of Foreign Exchange and the supply of Gold have been wholly reversed, much to the relief of the Merchants connected as Importers or Exporters with our Foreign Trade. Gold is made easy for delivery by the extra sales of the Treasury yesterday, and Bills on London have advanced to 108⅛@108⅜ for 60 days and 109⅛@109½ ₱ cent. for short sight, with a pretty free business going on. The sales of Gold, have not materially varied, ranging 114⅛@113⅞@114⅛@114⅜ ₱ cent. One or two Banking firms were large buyers, which held the market comparatively firm in price and active in demand. The speculative holders of Gold, from having of late exacted a bonus for the daily use of the Cash Gold, today paid from 4 to 6@7 ₱ cent. interest to have it carried over.

The rate for money is now fairly established at 7 ₱ cent, as the rule of the Street, the Trust Companies and other large lenders having marked up their dealers to this rate. The supply is comparatively easy and not likely to be otherwise for some days to come, notwithstanding the general expectation of a bad Bank Statement to-morrow Afternoon. The Treasury gained largely in Greenbacks today, while the Banks gained in Gold Notes. The difference is not so marked upon the Bank movement as was apprehended yesterday. It is not improbable that the Treasury will make extra purchases of United States 5-20s early next week, which will draw down the Greenback balance, now larger than needed for current disbursements by the Department.

An order is still in force at the Treasury to cash Coupons on the Public Debt, at any time within 60 days of their maturity, at an abatement of interest at the rate of 6 ₱ cent. per annum. After the 20th October both the Coupon and Registered November Interest will probably be prepaid without rebate.

The London telegrams today are construed as unfavorable to the financial situation in that market, as well as to the American Funds. Our 5-20s, 10-40s and the New Loan are all lower on the change of Interest at the Bank of England, and purchases of Gold are made here today on the calculation that some of the United States 5-20s, of 1862 coupons, held abroad, and advertised to be redeemed at the Treasury at Washington, Dec. 1, will come out for payment here in place of being exchanged with the Syndicate of the New Loan in London. The difference to the Treasury would not be material or important. The amount secured to be paid for the New Loan on the other side is $80,000,000. If any considerable part of the 1862s should come out, the Secretary would have the same amount to draw from London either in Gold or its equivalent in other 5-20s. His surplus in Gold, here, or a good part of it would be well disposed of either way. We have reason to believe, however, that the English and Continental subscribers to the New Loan will be unable to buy other 5-20s any cheaper than the class to be redeemed at Washington in Gold.

The acceptance of the new situation in the Money market of full 7 ₱ cent. Interest by the Brokers of the Stock Exchange has made a better market for the Railway and Miscellaneous Stocks, better, we mean, in respect to the confidence of operators in respect to the means of carrying forward their purchases. The remaining questions are, first, whether the supply of Money can be kept easy at the advanced rate, and secondly, whether outside parties will go into stocks on speculation, with decided freedom, on the eve of larger trade employment for money in October and November, and the Bank movement not yet adjusted to this extra demand. The New-York and Western Roads and the Miscellaneous Stocks were well supported today, and after the late Boards the following quotations were made as compared with Thursday night. The Public Funds and the Pacific Railway Mortgages were steady at the close; the Southern State Bonds weak. The new buyers of Gold, on the London telegrams referred to, advanced their bids to 114¼ ₱ cent.

BANKING OFFICE OF FISK & HATCH, No. 5 NASSAU-ST., NEW-YORK, Sept. 16, 1871.

Of the FIFTEEN MILLION CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO SIX PER CENT. LOAN less than one-third ($5,000,000) remain unsold, and this remainder is being taken so rapidly as to insure the early closing out of the loan. The five-years' option of the Government having already expired on all series of Five-twenty Bonds, except 1867s and 1868s, they are liable to be called in for payment. The Chesapeake and Ohio Sixes have absolutely 30 years to run before maturity; and can now be bought 17 per cent. less than TEN-FORTIES, 20 per cent less than FIVE-TWENTIES or the new FIVE PER CENTS, and 25 per cent. less than SIXES of 1881; are equally sure to be paid, principal and interest, in gold coin. $1,000 Chesapeake and Ohio Bond costs today $933 01.
$500 Chesapeake and Ohio Bond costs today $476 51.
$100 Chesapeake and Ohio Bond costs today $95 30.

Only a small amount of the latter denominations remains, and no more can be made. Bonds are in coupon or registered form, same as Five-Twenties.

This debt is created by the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company in order more speedily and effectually to extend and complete the main line of their Road to the Ohio River. This work—the most important internal improvement now progressing in the country—is rapidly approaching completion. It will establish another and superior line of communication between the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and the eastern cities; bringing ten millions of people, mainly producers, nearer to the centres of consumption in the Eastern States, and nearer to the political and commercial capitals of their country. Such is the commanding importance of this Trunk Line, that the larger cities of the West are projecting feeders to connect with it, so as to avail themselves of its unequaled facilities as soon as it is completed. Large tracts of valuable coal and iron lands along its route are passing into the hands of practical miners and iron manufacturers; a large city is springing up at the western terminus, the head of reliable navigation on the Ohio, where it intersects 12,000 miles of river transit, and will soon be in connection with 30,000 miles of railroad carriage.

When the United States was engaged in creating its debt and the price was low, we advised our customers to place their surplus in United States Bonds. The Government is now enabled to buy its bonds from its surplus revenues; hence their high price. Holders can now exchange their Government bonds for CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO BONDS with great advantage. A Sinking Fund of $100,000 per annum is provided for the redemption of the Bonds, to take effect one year after the completion of the Road.

We buy and sell FIVE-TWENTIES, TEN-FORTIES, EIGHTY-ONES, and CENTRAL or WESTERN PACIFICS, or receive them in payment for CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO BONDS at their current market price.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND-GRANT BONDS OF THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY.

IN DENOMINATIONS OF $1,000, $500, AND $100, can now be had from the undersigned or through the principal banks and bankers of the United States. The attention of investors is invited to the merits of these bonds, secured by a first and only mortgage on the road, equipments, franchises, and property of a trunk line of railroad which will shorten the distance between New-York and San Francisco some 220 miles, and in addition the mortgage to secure the bonds covers a land-grant of 1,500,000 acres of the most fertile land in the West, which is prohibited from being sold at less than four ($4) dollars per acre by the terms of the mortgage deed, and according to the present market price of the Illinois Centra Company's lands is worth $6,000,000. This loan was originally for $6,000,000, but has been largely reduced by subscriptions of actual investors. The remaining balance of the loan is offered at 97½ and accrued interest, but the right is reserved to advance the price at any time, without notice.

The bonds have thirty years to run, bear 6 per cent. interest, payable in New-York, London or Frankfort-on-the-Main, at the option of the holder, without notice, free of taxes. BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST ARE PAYABLE IN GOLD. They are Coupon Bonds, but can be registered with the coupons ON, or can be registered with the coupons OFF, and interest paid to registered owner. Interest payable Aug. 15 and Feb. 15. A liberal sinking fund, formed from the entire land sales, in payment for which the bonds will be received at par and accrued interest, provides for the early extinguishment of this loan.

Trustees—Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

These bonds offer favorable inducements to parties desiring to fund their Five-Twenties or other high-priced securities.

In converting Five-Twenties the investors realize 17 per cent. profit on the principal; 2 per cent. per annum excess of interest; and at the same time get a perfect security.

Maps, circulars, documents, and full information furnished on application.

Though acting as agents for the sale of this loan, our firm buy and sell in their regular business the bonds of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, those of the Eastern Division being now quoted at 103 and accrued interest. These were originally placed by us at 97½.

☞ FIVE-TWENTIES CAN BE FUNDED with us into the best Railroad Bonds. We recommend those of the BONDOUT AND OSWEGO COMPANY for three reasons: 1. These Bonds are safe. The road is near this City. Every investor can travel over it for himself. The net earnings of one-half of the line pay at present 10 per cent. on all the bonds which will be issued on the whole road. 2. By conversion, as we recommend, the investor adds 25 per cent. to his capital. 3. He also adds 43 1-3 per cent. to his income. EDWARD HAIGHT & CO.,

FLOUR AND MEAL—There has been a comparatively slow movement in State and Western Flour. Shipping Extras are scarce, and have met with a fair show of firmness, but have been without support. For most other grades business has been dull, with prices generally quoted weak and in favor of buyers. Sales have been reported since our last of 9,850 bbls., sold including very little to the trade Superfine State and Western at $5 40@$5; inferior to very good Extra State, $6 20@$6 55; very good to fancy at $6 60@$7 10; poor to very good shipping Extras at $6 15@$6 45; round hoop Ohio at $6 50@$7 50; trade brands of Extra Ohio at $6 20@$6 60 ₱ bbl. We quote:

Southern Flour has been in less request at somewhat easier prices, with sales since our last of 850 bbls., at $5 85@$7 10, and $7 20@$9 for good to fancy, to very choice Extra, ₱ bbl. Rye Flour has been in moderate demand at $4 12@$6 40 ₱ bbl.; sales, 350 bbls. Corn-meal has been inactive at $3 to@$3 85 for White and Yellow Western, $3 05@$3 75 for Jersey, and $4 10@$4 15 for Brandywine, ₱ bbl.; sales, 225 bbls.

FRUIT—A fairly active call has been noted for the principal varieties of foreign, particularly Layer Raisins, Currants, Prunes and Almonds, at well-supported rates. Sarsinas have met more attention, and prices. We quote: Layer Raisins at $3 for old, with sales of 2,000 boxes, and $3 50@$4 for new; Currants chiefly at 8c. ₱ lb., with sales of 600 bbls.; Almonds, 14½c.@17½c.; Turkish Prunes, 7½c.@8c.; Brazil Nuts, 8½c.@9c.; Dates, 6¼c.@7c.; Filberts, 9¾c.@10¼c.; ₱ lb.; Canton Ginger, $8 50 ₱ case; Sardines, 23c.@27½c. per quarter-boxes.

FEATHERS—Have been quiet after a in a jobbing way at 67c.@77c. for good to strictly choice Live Geese, ₱ lb.

FOREIGN LIQUORS—Have been selling rather more freely at former quotations.

FISH—A moderate trade has been noted in the leading kinds at steady rates. Dry Cod at $4 75@$5 50 ₱ cwt.; No. 1 Mackerel, $14@$14 50; No. 2 do. $9@$10; Smoked Herring, 30c.@34c. for Scale, and 26c.@26c. for No. 1, ₱ box.

GRAIN—The West market has shown less activity, since our last. The offerings have been on a rather more liberal scale, and holders have been more eager to place stock. Prices have been depressed and quoted 1c.@2c. ₱ bushel below the instances of Spring, and the poorer grades of Red Winter, which have been most abundant. The export demand has been on a restricted scale, checked, in part, by the firmer engagements of the ocean freight market. The inquiry from millers has been light. The general market closed heavily on the basis of $1 45 for fair ordinary samples of No. 2 Chicago Spring afloat. Sales have been reported of 185,000 bushels at $1 45@$1 47 for No. 2 Spring, chiefly at $1 46@$1 46, and $1 47 for called No. 2 Spring; $1 39@$1 46 for Winter Red Western; $1 57@$1 60 for Amber Western; $1 65@$1 67 for White Western; $1 67 for Amber Southern; $1 68 for White State; $1 65@$1 70 for Choice No. 2 Spring, to arrive, and $1 70@$1 75 for Straight No. 2 Milwaukee, to arrive. Corn has been quoted lower, under the free receipts, and the apparent eagerness of holders to realize, especially on Mixed and Yellow. At the close the decline in prices, a fairly active business has been reported, in good part for shipment, closing with some show of steadiness. For lots in store, a pretty lively inquiry was noted, partly on speculative account, at about previous quotations, closing firmly. For Yellow and White Corn the call was slow, and the market more or less nominal; sales have been reported of 207,000 bushels at 71¾c.@72¼c. for Western Mixed, in store, closing at 72¼c.@72¾c., and afloat at 72¾c.@73½c.; and at 72¼c.@73c.; Yellow do. at 74¼c.@75c. ₱ bushel. Rye has been inactive, owing, partly, to the high claims of holders, who seem confident in their views, and not eager to place available samples. Barley was quoted at 90c. asked for prime, with 86c. bid; 18,000 bushels were reported sold at 83½c. ₱ bushel. Barley attracted but little attention, and values were more or less nominal. For some prime Western holders were asking up $1 05 ₱ bushel. Barley-malt was in light request, yet quoted about steady. Oats have been less sought after by the trade, and were quoted less firm. There was some speculative inquiry for Mixed Western, to arrive, at the quoted rate. Sales have been reported since our last of 80,000 bushels at 52c.@51c. for New Mix

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The Exchange yesterday, Sept. 23, was unusually quiet, but few persons being in attendance, and the market generally was very dull. No public auctions of any description were held, and the inquiry for property at private sale was extremely limited. There is a manifest indisposition, just at present, among both buyers and sellers, to make any move calculated to promote activity, and, as a consequence, affairs are at a dead lock. For to-day the only sale advertised is one at Peekskill, Westchester County, at which a residence in that town will be offered. For particulars relating to the proposed transaction, reference is made to our advertising columns. In regard to the business projected both next week, full details will be published as usual, on Monday. Several of the sales to be effected are of some importance, and worthy the attention of investors.

Disgraceful Corruption in the Department of Buildings.

Large Meeting of Indignant Citizens—Strong Affidavits—Proposed Charges Against the Accused.

A meeting of up-town builders, owners of dwelling-houses and architects was held last evening in Brevoort Hall, corner of Fifty-fourth-street and Third-avenue, to deliberate upon measures to free themselves from the oppressive operations of the Building law as now administered. Large numbers were present, and among them were several Inspectors who came to watch the proceedings in the interest of Superintendent MACGREGOR, against whom the meeting was virtually aimed. Col. MARSHALL, called the meeting to order, and proposed that the members should then and there form a permanent organization to resist official tyranny and to petition the State Legislature for the repeal of the obnoxious law. Mr. PETER TOUTVEIN was then chosen President of the Association, JOHN W. MARSHALL, Secretary, and GEO. DOLLINGER, Treasurer. Mr. TOUTVEIN addressed the meeting in an able speech, during which he read the letter which he had received from Judge TAPPAN, on a recent occasion. It was as follows:

MR. DOLLINGER: If yourself and other builders have been wronged by Superintendent of Buildings, MACGREGOR, to the tune of seventy cents, I only ask a few dollars more to have his course or be dismissed. And I offer the building fraternity of the City a good chance. They have power, and can use it if they will. It is their duty, if they have been victims of tyranny and injustice of petty officials. This matter must be attended to now. Your obedient servant,

A. R. TAPPAN.

7 o'clock, Sept., 1871.

Please answer, and don't be a coward.

A committee of twenty-five gentlemen was then appointed to draft a petition, and to take such further steps as might be deemed necessary. A call was made for Mr. WILLIAM S. WRIGHT, but that gentleman being absent, the Secretary rose and explained that Mr. WRIGHT had left a series of charges against Mr. MACGREGOR, and an affidavit with him, and that he would now read them both. First came the charges, which were as follows:

Mr. Superintendent MACGREGOR denies that any clearances are made in his office for special permits or exemptions under the Building law, and challenges investigation. For the purpose of procuring such investigation I charge:

1. I charge that a systematic blackmailing of builders and owners has been carried on since the organization of the Department.

2. I charge that money is habitually paid to officers of the Department for expediting or for permits to build contrary to the requirements of the Building law.

3. I charge that various parties contributed materials and money to the completion of the alterations and additions to the Superintendent's residence in consideration of favors and exemptions granted them.

4. I charge that plumbing materials were contributed for the Superintendent's residence by a party under the supposed condition that I allowed to build eight-inch brick walls for his dwelling-house.

5. I charge that when a party desired to obtain a special permit from the Supreme Court and employed the ex-officio counsel to draw up papers they were contemptuously thrown aside by the Superintendent, and the exemption sought for was only obtained through the machinery of the office by being paid for. I charge that a fee of $25 for $1 was given by a builder to the person appointed to collect five-dollar fees, and when the check was returned unpaid, and injunction was obtained by the Superintendent, stopping the work which injunction was removed by the payment of the money.

7. I charge that parties applying for exemptions and permits, strictly in accordance with the law, can only obtain them by employing MURRAY, and paying him extra compensation.

8. The Superintendent denies all knowledge of MURRAY. I charge that the papers presented by MURRAY to the Court have the sworn affidavit of MACGREGOR, or his family, attached thereto.

9. I charge that the officers of the Department instruct persons applying for exemptions, that MURRAY is the only person who can procure such exemption for the Court.

10. I charge that frivolous complaints are constantly being made against builders and owners, and vexatious suits commenced on them for the purpose of extorting money, and said complaints and suits are settled upon the payment of sums from $5 to $100, and the whole affair complained of is permitted to remain.

11. I charge that five separate suits, claiming $50 in each suit, were commenced against Mr. HENRY H. ELLSWORTH for having proceeded in violation in erecting first-class dwelling-houses without first obtaining the permission of the Superintendent; said suits were commenced after the buildings were completed, and to save annoyance Mr. STOLLMEYER paid $50 in full settlement to WILLIAM C. WRIGHT.

These charges produced great excitement, and two of MACGREGOR'S inspectors slunk out of the hall. The Secretary then read the affidavit:

STATE OF NEW-YORK, CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK: I, WILLIAM S. WRIGHT, of No. 20 East Twenty-sixth-street, do make oath that I reside in the City of New-York, and since the year 1846 have been engaged in building as a business in the City of New-York. In the year 1869 I erected sixteen five-story brick dwelling-houses on East 54th-st. tenements, and I was required to, and obtained a permit therefor from the Department for the Survey and Inspection of Buildings. At an interview with Inspector MACGREGOR, Superintendent of said Department, had by me relative to the obtaining such permission, said MACGREGOR told me that I should engage the services of Mr. ROBERT MURRAY, counselor at law, then having an office in Pine-street, New-York City; said I was inclined to believe from said MACGREGOR'S conversation that unless I did so engage the services of said MURRAY I could not be permitted to erect said houses five stories in height. At about the same time I also conversed with Mr. HENRY J. ARMSTRONG, who was connected with said Department, and received from said ARMSTRONG the same instructions that I must see said MURRAY if I hoped to obtain the said permit. I therefore called upon said ROBERT MURRAY, then at his office, introduced myself, and stated my business, whereupon said MURRAY demanded payment for his services in obtaining such permits at the rate of about $200 for each house, for which I refused to pay. Thereupon said MURRAY replied to said objection that the reason why his charges were so high was, that it was required he should share the money's with other parties. And said ROBERT MURRAY also told me that he said MURRAY was required to pay to Judge HARMAND twenty-five dollars for each order for each permit signed by said Judge. I further make oath that HENRY J. ARMSTRONG also told me that Judge HARMAND was to receive twenty-five dollars for each order for each permit signed by said Judge.

I do further on my oath say that for the permits granted me as aforesaid during the year 1869, I paid to said ROBERT MURRAY, by checks upon bank in March of that year, $1,000; in April of same year, $950; in May of same year, $600; and in September, 1870, $150; that all said checks, indorsed by said MURRAY, were paid, and all said payments were made by Mr. HENRY H. ELLSWORTH, and said MURRAY, as he had stated to me, was required to share said moneys with other parties, and pay said Judge HARMAND. I further, on my oath, say that until the time I was told by Mr. MACGREGOR to employ said ROBERT MURRAY as counsel, I had no acquaintance with said MURRAY, nor had the said MURRAY either before or since been employed by me as counsel. WILLIAM S. WRIGHT.

At the conclusion of the reading, Messrs. SEXTON, RENDALL, BENCHELL and others delivered telling speeches, insisting on instant action. Mr. THEODORE F. TILDEN, Vice-President of the Manufacturers' and Builders' Bank presented the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, We recognize the efficiency of a building law for the City of New-York, and believe that several of the clauses of the present law are commendable; but whereas several provisions of the law now in force are arbitrary, despotic, tyrannical, unjust and injurious to the prosperity of our City. Therefore we firmly, yet respectfully, demand a repeal of the obnoxious clauses that have for the past year exerted so much an influence upon the building interests of this great City.

Resolved, That the blackmailing operations of the heads of the Building Department, as at present constituted, are not only reprehensible, but in themselves criminal, and we call upon the proper authorities to immediately remove them from the positions they now disgrace.

Resolved, That an Executive Committee of fifteen be appointed to carry out the objects for which we have assembled, and to confer with the Chief Executive of this City; and we urge upon him the immediate removal of all corrupt officials, or indirectly with the Building Department, who may be proven guilty of improper practices in the performance of their official duties.

A vote of thanks was then tendered to Judge TAPPAN, who had inaugurated the policy of resistance to the black-mailer MACGREGOR, and to Judge GEORGE BARNARD, for his manly conduct in the late trial. The meeting then adjourned, the committee-men remaining in the hall to receive upon various measures. There was much enthusiasm, tempered with method, in their counsels, and they quickly arrived at the following conclusions: To engage as counsel JOHN B. MASKIN; to meet on Tuesday evening at Col. MARSHALL'S office, and prepare a petition to the Legislature, and to hold a mass-meeting at the Cooper Institute next Wednesday, on which occasion the prosecution of Mr. MACGREGOR would be taken into serious consideration. They then retired.

Democrats and the Ring.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The World in its leading article this morning laboriously strives to deprive the TIMES of the credit to which it is entitled for having brought about the present exposures of Ring corruption, theft, perjury and all uncleanness. It claims that all that is practical and effective in the action taken to effect these exposures has been the work of Democrats. Very well, there are honest Democrats, but did the World prove itself one of this class when throughout the whole of this affair it has daily labored to prevent these same exposures? As a Democrat myself, and as an honest citizen, I cannot see it. The action of Mr. TILDEN and of Mr. HAVEMEYER has my hearty approbation; so likewise has that of the TIMES and all Republicans who have acted the part it has in the premises. For the sake of every principle that is worth living for, it is to be hoped that there may be many more then found in this community to set aside the paltry jealousies and prejudices that clog to party and partisan feeling, and set up for themselves a standard of justice, integrity and truth—enough of these to purify the Government of this great City. It is only by so doing that we can hope for the perpetuity of Democratic-republican institutions throughout the Republic.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

The Summer Weather—Scenes at Malvern—American Women—Wedding Gifts—Lodgings—Wants and Necessities—Hardships of Governesses—The Suppression of Intemperance—A Sensational Candidate.

From Our Special Correspondent.

CRAIG MALVERN, England, Saturday, Sept. 9, 1871.

The beautiful Summer weather has lasted through August, and this fair is to last into September. There could not be a finer time for harvest, and now we have a glorious harvest moon to help on the good work. The haying-places all round the coast are also gathering their harvests. Lincolnshire has been so crowded that people were glad to stand in the bathing-machines. Weston-Super-Mare is full, and our inland watering-places bear the same appearance of visitors. We have no royalty this year to draw a crowd—only an Earl and two or three Countesses. But Earls and Countesses are our near neighbors. We have them on all sides of us. Some are very ill. A very feeble Earl went past my window just now drawn by a donkey in a low wheeled chair very convenient for invalids. There was the mild donkey, the rough donkey-driver, the poor sick Earl a shadow of himself, so thin as was so ghastlike, and the tall ruddy chaplain walking beside him. The air of the hills may revive his Lordship, but I fear not. When parents can live nowhere else they are sent to Malvern.

AN AMERICAN COLONY.

Luckily a good many come full of health and vigor, just to enjoy them. We never lack a colony of Americans. There are always more or less—just now rather more. But we had three or four American families all last Winter, most of them Roman Catholics, as if hereabouts, and the nearest Roman Catholic chapels were three or four miles away. There was here, however, an invalid American priest, Rev. GEORGE MCGLORY, of New-York. He came to Europe for his health, some years ago, and, after visiting the most famous health resorts in Europe, was going back to America, in despair of being cured, when some good angel said to him—go to Malvern. He came in November, and in February he was well enough to say mass. The American and English Catholics at Malvern fitted up a temporary chapel in a Hydropathic gymnasium. The first Sunday there were twenty persons present—the next thirty, then forty. An invalid American Colonel, too stiff to kneel, served mass; a half-pay Irish Captain handed round the plate at the offertory; the American ladies from Baltimore and Philadelphia dressed the altar beautifully with flowers.

NO POVERTY.

But Malvern is intensely Re-Popery, and the proprietor of the gymnasium found himself in trouble. The new altar got noised abroad. Father GEORGE MCGLORY took refuge in the drill-room of the Volunteers, and his congregation rose to sixty; and he opened a subscription to build a new chapel, going into it with a zeal and fervor truly American and truly refreshing. The shop-keepers, who had profited largely by the custom of the American Catholic ladies, gave a little, but timidly, fearful they might lose on the other side. But they knew a Catholic chapel would draw Catholic visitors to help the place. And Father GEORGE set them a noble example by heading the subscription with five hundred dollars out of his own pocket, and further encouraged the undertaking by promising to appeal to Bishop ULLATHORNE when Father MCGLORY returned to New-York, and have mass is said daily; and on Sundays, where I supposed there were not a dozen Catholics, there is a steady congregation of about a hundred souls, a considerable proportion of whom are French, Germans, Spanish, and Americans.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

The American element breaks out at times in unexpected manifestations. One night this week some wag of prosaic mind roared about the town, the band playing, as long as it was in my hearing—shadow of Bunker Hill monument, could I believe my ears!—"Yankee Doodle." The Republican clubs have adopted it as a lively and lucky quickstep, with pleasanter associations than the "Marseillaise," if not quite as good music. I have sometimes heard an attempt at "Hail Columbia." If you can only succeed in purifying the streets and politics of New-York, you may expect the people at England to appear a good many American tunes and institutions. In the meantime the Iron and Steel Institute are discussing this week an American invention, which they are very anxious about. Mr. DANKS, of Cincinnati, contributed a paper on a rotary puddling furnace which he had constructed and put in operation at various works in the United States. Every attempt to puddle by machinery in England has been a failure. The Institute proposes to send out a commission to examine the American invention. The Birmingham Post says:

"It will not be the first time that the Old World will be indebted to the New World for the construction of labor-saving machines, which add so much to the material wealth of nations, and render it possible that the whole circle of modern life may be more expeditiously and cheaply produced, and therefore more widely and generally diffused. It is one of the peculiarities, and, as we think, one of the glories of the United States, that its genius takes this practical direction. The cultivating of the arts, the increase of the refinements and elevating influences of literature, the prosecution of the more abstruse researches of pure science—these are matters which affect the progress of man and his ultimate happiness. But these are things in which the older and more settled communities of Europe may well be expected to excel. America may allow them, and yet fairly lay claim to the credit of materially add the contributions which it is continually making toward the material well-being of the world. In the instance now before us, the benefit is so great, and the difficulties said to have been overcome have been so formidable, that English iron-masters may well be pardoned for desiring further evidence of the actual results. What is claimed for the new furnace is that it saves immensely in the department of labor, since the steel reduces part of the work is performed mechanically; that it saves fuel to a great extent, partly by the construction of the furnace, but largely owing to the fact that it can be worked at a much higher temperature than would be possible where hand labor is employed; that it avoids a great loss of material, which always attends the old method; and that it yields a more perfect accomplishment of the whole working process, and secures an improvement in the quality of the iron produced."

The English iron-master who has made the most effort in this direction is a Greek, with one of those surprising familiar names which seem so odd with a Mister attached to it—Mr. MERELAUS. But Greeks are getting as scattered over the world that I have no doubt you have New-York alone on which you can read, "Perides, Aleibiades & Co.," as you can, or something very like it, in London or Manchester.

WORKING MEN AS LEGISLATORS.

I am not certain whether it is an American notion to have working men represented by persons of their own order in Congress or the State Legislatures. Here there has been a good deal of talk about it for a long time, and two or three working men have tried very hard to get elected to Parliament—Mr. ODGER, for example. But the most advanced Liberals have not been willing to open their Club, the House of Commons, to blacksmiths and shoemakers, tinkers and tailors. Even Mr. BRIGHT has decided objections, and no faith whatever in working men representatives. But the Labor Representative League means to have another try for it. Its just issued address calls for a new agitation. It says:

"Patient, loyal working men, we call on you to again engage in your old fight with men in power. Gather yourselves together in every constituency. Discard moonlighters, party orgies, and no a drop persuasions. Use the windy cation of your claims, putnal by exclusion from Parliament the men who, by their political treachery, hypocrisy and villany, worship of wealth, have deserved that you shall not cease to watch, have branded on you the degrading stigma of political inferiority."

That is being interpreted, defeat Mr. BRIGHT. But working men are in large majorities in many of the towns, and can elect working men to Parliament whenever they choose to do so. There is no law against it—then why agitate? There is, however, one kind of working men I should like to see in Congress or Parliament—the more the better. An Englishman, who has lately been made a Baronet, Sir TITUS SALT, ought to be a first-rate legislator. He is a manufacturer, and has built the town of Saltaire—not an ordinary English manufacturing town, but a model town, filled with model dwellings and institutions—a town constructed upon the best sanitary and economic principles, presided over by princely taste and liberality. Saltaire has its splendid club and institute, almshouses and infirmary, baths and schools, fatarch and park, all planned and built by Sir TITUS. The consequence is that Saltaire, this model town, has a model population. It has never had a strike. It has suffered from no disasters. The whole population are devoted to their employer, and he has done all that was possible to make them prosperous and happy. The fortune Sir TITUS has made by their labor he has freely expended for their benefit. They could not place their interests in better keeping.

WORK AND RECREATION.

The Bishop of Manchester, in a speech to railway employés, said some good things to them about recreation. He said:

"He had seen life in France, Germany and Italy; and though he should not like us to envy all their modes of life, he did say that life on the Continent was somehow or other a brighter, and, in some senses, a sweeter thing than it was in England. Not yet found out the secret of spending a holiday in a rational recreative way. A Frenchman or a German would go out and spend a pleasant day and yet come home sober, and so do this was what the working men of England had yet to learn. He once attended a conference of some eight hundred Sunday school teachers, at which there was an almost unanimous agreement on the part of the speakers that intemperance was—he would not say increasing in the aggregate—but that it was spreading in directions, where, above all others, it was most fatal in its influence; that it was spreading among young girls and sunday-school scholars. He was afraid there was too much trouble in the remark that the principle of filial reverence and filial obedience was very much lessened in these latter days."

The Bishop is quite right—but he might have said a word about the way soulless corporations make recreation impossible. Mr. BASS, M. P., who brews good ale and wants men to have a chance to drink it comfortably, has been giving some examples of the way they work on railways. JOHN WALKER, engine-driver, states that he had been on his engine eight times over sixteen hours, five times seventeen hours, four times over seventeen hours, once eighteen hours, twice over eighteen hours, once nineteen hours, once twenty hours, once over twenty-two hours, once over twenty-three hours, once twenty-four hours, once twenty-eight hours; out of 1,462 consecutive hours, he was on his engine 900 hours. The pointsmen have a still harder time. Mr. BASS says:

"I learned that at one of the boxes near Leeds, from 250 to 260 trains passed during the twenty-four hours, each train having to be entered in a book nine times. During the same time there were 6,000 'beats' on the signal bells, 2,160 'beats' of the signal needles and 464 levers to 'pull over'—all this being exclusive of shunting and transfer of traffic."

A signal-man says:

"We have twelve hours night and twelve hours day duty, and I can say with a clear conscience that I have not time to eat my meals nor sit down. We oversaw about two hundred and fifty trains in twenty-four hours, beside engine-cleaning and piloting every minute. We have on our hands all this responsibility for the sum of eighteen shillings per week or six and a half days. I have been running about with my dinner in my hand, putting it down and taking it up, and biting at it like a dog. I have put it on the shelf over my work frequently, and bite and and until it is finished." Finally, to include all the evils of railway servants, it should be mentioned that the common porters work from sixteen to nineteen hours a day, for 20s. 6d., with some little addition for overtime." Fancy "overtime," with an average of sixteen or nineteen hours daily labor!

And think, if you can, of abundance of men eagerly seeking such work for such wages—from 24 to 29 a week. The railway porters do pretty well, as their low wages are supplemented by gratuities. The overworked guards get an occasional half-crown or shilling; but pointsmen, signalmen, drivers and stokers have no such solace, and when they get tired and confused with such work, and make a blunder which sends a train to destruction, they are liable to be tried for manslaughter.

HARDSHIPS OF GOVERNESSES.

I do not know of any class worse treated in England than the railway men, unless it be the governesses. In America it is honorable to teach the young idea how to shoot. Here it is disgraceful. I know a young lady who is well educated, a proficient in music and French, a helpless burden upon a small income she would be very glad to increase, but she must not teach because it would hinder her and her sisters from getting married. The social stigma is too severe. A governess is a social anomaly, occupying a position rather less dignified than that of a lady's maid, and rather less remunerative than that of a house-maid. The usual salary is from $80 to $100 a year, a few get $250, and the governess is decidedly not treated as one of the family; young hopeful must not speak to her on pain of her dismissal; the children are rude to her, the servants snub her, and the mistress barely tolerates her presence in the drawing room when specially required to be there. A nursery governess writes to a London paper that she had to get up at 5 o'clock to get her master's breakfast because the servants would not rise so early. Then she washed and dressed the children, helped make the beds, clean rooms, and then went to the school room, making herself useful in this fashion, on $10 a year. This is the fate of educated young ladies, while a house-maid seems to touch the least bit of work out of her department, and a lady's maid, dresses and acts like a princess, according to the notions she has acquired of princesses in the London Journal.

THE SUPPRESSION OF INTEMPERANCE.

Earl RUSSELL, a wonderfully active-minded octogenarian, has been presiding over a conference of the National Union for the suppression of intemperance. He said in his sharp, bitter way of Mr. BRUCE's Licensing bill of the last session of Parliament, that it combined the maximum amount of provocation with the minimum amount of efficiency. It is calculated that in the five years ending with 1870, the British people spent for intoxicating liquors the sum of £514,949,945. The sum expended in 1870 was £108,163,922 —about three times the annual receipts of all the railways in the United Kingdom, twice as much as the capital of all the savings banks; half as much again as the national revenue, and fifty times the collective income of all the religious and philanthropic institutions of the country. Much the larger share of this burden falls upon the working classes. These estimates are based on spirits, &c., which pay duties; but it seems that a good deal is drank in regard to which that patriotic ceremony is dispensed with. A man was found drunk in the streets of Bolton, the other day, and taken into custody. In his pocket the officers found a pint bottle of whisky. It was submitted to the Excise authorities, who smelled it, tasted it, and decided that it had never paid duty. The man was prosecuted for having it in his possession, and, though he declared he knew nothing about it, he was fined £20. Are your American Excise officers sharp enough to tell by smelling a man's breath whether the liquor he has drank has paid its taxes? If not, you can send over a commission for further instructions. Their education is not completed.

A SENSATIONAL CANDIDATE.

The author of Gina's Baby is running for Parliament and writing political articles in the Daily News, in which he is terribly severe on Mr. GLADSTONE and his Government. The father of Gina's Baby says:

"There are terrible rocks ahead. There is an aristocracy brooding upon English land; there is an indefensible system of religious superiority; and there are manufacturers paying labor alive in our midst; there are people starving in our streets, dying in doubtful homes; there are children growing up fiends incarnate; there is local mismanagement and an

Summer Travels—The Welsh Brighton—The Welsh Language—Heads of the People—Country Pictures—Work for Mr. Ruskin—Names and Characters—Religious Belief—Earl Dudley's Domains—Need of Reform—A Return to the Stage.

From a Special Correspondent.

ABERYSTWITH, Monday, Sept. 11, 1871.

I made a plunge through the centre of Wales, and here I am on a beautiful pebbly beach, on the shore of a blue sea, in the centre of Cardigan Bay, on a line with the south coast of Ireland. Aberystwith (accented on the third syllable) is an ancient town of five thousand inhabitants, and the model of a second-rate watering-place. It has a beautiful curve of beach, an iron pier for promenading, a grand cliff as the north end, the ruins of an ancient castle at the south, a sweep of lodging-houses, all made of bow windows, looking out upon the sea, plenty of hotels, churches and shops. There are boats to let for sailing and rowing, two lines of bathing-machines, or small dressing-rooms on wheels, masculine and feminine, at different points of the beach, but both commanded by the lodging-house windows, and a cluster of donkeys, to let for exercise an hour.

THE WELSH BRIGHTON.

I found the Welsh Brighton rather hard to eat at. Starting from Malvern, I went under the hills and through the orchards to Hereford; then due north through a beautiful country some forty-five miles to Shrewsbury; then west, south, west, and south again. A perfect signal of railway lines, on which I was twelve hours, including stops, getting about eighty miles as the crow flies. Of course one can get on faster with good connections. But if the tourist wants to get into a foreign country at the least expense, being in mid-England, let him try Wales. The names of the stations will give him the look of. What is a man to make of Llwyngwril, Ynys-Las, Caerswa, Clwilog, and so on? But it you wish to see the people of the country—Welshmen, and Welsh women especially, in their curious national costumes, and hear Welsh spoken all around you, with scarcely a word of English, you must travel third-class. I tried second-class and had a compartment all to myself, rolling along in solitary grandeur, enjoying the scenery, but only seeing the people at the stations. Then I changed to a long third-class carriage, putting up with hard seats and a little tobacco-smoke, and found myself a foreigner in a moment.

THE WELSH LANGUAGE.

There were thirty people, men and women, old and young, all talking and laughing in great glee, but in a language that might as well have been Chinese. In most of the languages of Western Europe, however little you are acquainted with them, you recognize familiar words. Not so in Welsh. It is somewhat like Gaelic, Irish and Breton, and the inflections are like Irish; but after looking at it, and wondering how it was possible to pronounce those queer combinations of consonants, I was surprised at the softness and melody of the speech. There are no sylibants and no harsh gutterals. I do not wonder that the people love it and willingly talk and sing no other. As far as I could see, everybody could speak both languages, Welsh and English. All the children. I was told, learn both. But Welsh is the favorite, and most persons speak English with a foreign accent or brogue. At one point we took up a festive party of about twenty young ladies and school girls, looking very nice, and some of them very bright and pretty. As soon as they were well settled in their seats, and the train in motion, they all burst into song. I had blundered into a cage of nightingales. They sang in two parts, soprano and contralto, two or three men supplying the bass, and really sang delightfully. But every piece was in Welsh. The only word I recognized was "Jerusalem." The language seemed as soft and smooth as Italian—far better for music than English, French or German. Wales has been conquered for centuries. It is not a kingdom like Ireland—only a principality. The people have ages ago given up all thought of an independent national existance, but they cling to their language far more than in Scotland or Ireland. It is, I think, as rare to hear Irish in Ireland as it is to hear English among the common people in Wales. And the Welsh women have a pride in their national costume. Sitting opposite me in the railway carriage was a fine fair woman of forty, wearing on her head a black fir or silk hat—that is, there was placed on the top of her head a truncated cone about fourteen inches high, seven inches diameter at the base and four inches at the top. Around the base was a perfectly flat rim three inches broad. The band was two and one-half inches wide. Under this queer head-dress, or perhaps attached to it, was a white cap with ruches or ruffles at the sides, and the whole was tied under the chin with a white ribbon. Fancy a round, rosy face, laughing eyes and mouth, and a robust form, and you have a typical Welsh woman. She was talking as volubly as a French or Irish woman, and though I could not understand her jokes and repartees, it was evident that she had them in plenty for all comers. On market days, at Aberystwith, and more or less every day, you see groups of these very curious and quaint headdresses.

HEADS OF THE PEOPLE.

The Welsh women are very sturdy in appearance. I saw many groups working in the harvest fields in the Scriptural proportion of seven women to one man. The men work in the mines, and many emigrate. This large surplus of female population may have had something to do with the success of the Mormon missionaries in Wales. But I think I would venture these women to take their own parts in Utah or elsewhere. In London my Welsh acquaintances were mostly among the milk-maids, and I have heretofore recorded my admiration of their hard faces, stout legs, and the loads of milk they carry for miles through the streets every night and morning. Here is the same type of hardy workers; faces not bad, but not delicate or in the least effeminate, and forms—well, something like a characterization I once read in a fashionable magazine, where the girls at a country ball were said to be round where they ought to be flat, and flat where they ought to be round. Few of the women I saw seemed adapted to satisfy the requirements of the younger portion of the rising generation, differing very remarkably in this respect from most English women, and all I can remember in Belgium.

COUNTRY PICTURES.

I wonder how much the geological formation of a country has to do in forming the character of the people. There is scarcely time to see much of it in America, where people emigrate from the New-England hills to the prairies of the West, and thence to the Rocky Mountain States and Territories; but look at Hollanders and Swiss, at Scottish Highlanders and Low-landers, and look at this Welsh country and people. The rocks lay the bones. Generally the strata of slate, or sandstone, or lime are not set up on end. In the railway cuttings the rocks bristle up every way. Of course they were all formed in level beds, but what a simultaneous upheaving and twisting and turning at later periods. In the North there are five mountain peaks. You see them on the road from Holyhead to Chester, springing boldly from the seashore. There are hills everywhere, and the broken country and rocky soil reminded me of New-England. There are more stone-walls than hedges. The country is not wooded, like England, with large, scattering trees, but rather bare, as they have made it in America. The houses are mostly built of stone in towns and country—many miserable-looking dwellings covered with thatch, but many also well slated and looking very solid and comfortable. But very seldom do you see a pretty house or a pretty garden. There were nice flowers at some railway stations, but I suspect the cultivators were not Welsh. On the wild, hill-sides were plenty of mountain ash, patches of heath, golden-rod and other bright wild flowers, but not much of cultivated beauty. The towns are ugly; the black country of the south of Wales is as hideous as the black country of mid-England—only that there are fine hills and some good coast scenery, which a million furnaces belching blackness cannot wholly spoil; but the dwellings and surroundings of the people are greatly wanting in sweetness and light.

WORK FOR MR. RUSKIN.

A solid, hard-headed, hard-handed, upright, irresistible, energetic people, minding the main chance, and not much given to æsthetics. When Mr. RUSKIN has covered England with flowers and statues, he will still have a hard job to do in Wales. But people who cultivate poetry and music, and cling to their language as they do, and to some of their customs and costumes, might take to the idea of making their country beautiful. When a man is building a house for himself, and if he build in stone or brick, for many generations of men, why not make it so beautiful as to charm every beholder—a feature in the landscape—a picture to live in the memory? I think there should be an esthetic commission in every county or every town, and that no building of any kind should be erected without its approval. In the meantime, I would have volunteer æsthetic clubs or societies in every neighborhood, under the presidency of the most tasteful lady, with two gentlemen for Vice-Presidents. It should be their business to clear away every deformity, and create beauty—to plant a tree here, a clump of shrubbery there, and cultivate flowers everywhere, and make the whole district a delight. Every wayside might have its pretty seats, its flowering trees and plants, its cool, shaded fountains. The cost would be trifling, the labor delightful, the result something undreamed of in intellectual and moral culture. America has set the world so many good examples that I wish her to do this—to make her towns, villages and country places so attractive as to be models for all other lands.

POINTS OF INTEREST.

In this matter I cannot say much for Wales, nor for this good bathing town of Aberystwith. There is grand scenery all about—a fine coast, good runs. The new college of the University of Wales has some architectural pretensions; but a square block of stone, with rectangular holes in it for windows, describes most of the houses. The churches and chapels are of the plainest kind. I see no attempts at gardens. Almost every English cottage has flowers in its windows and about its door. My Malvern is one great garden, with picturesque villas scattered all over it. Here the only picturesque thing besides the sea and the hills, is the ruin of a castle built by STRONGBOW, rebuilt or extended in the thirteenth century, before whose walls fought OWEN GLENDWR and other famous Welsh chieftains, and which was finally taken and dismantled by the Republicans of the Cromwellian era, who seem to have been considerably more energetic than our Odgerites of the present day. Those ruins are very impressive. They seize you with a strong grip, and carry you back six centuries among a people who must have been very much in earnest.

NAMES AND CHARACTER.

There is a scarcity of surnames in Wales, and most of them are Christian names as well. Jones seems as common as Smith or Brown in England. Looking at the signs, one would say that the Joneses owned about half of Wales. And Jones, I take it, is a variation of John. The other popular Welsh surnames of Thomas, Roberts, Richards, Griffiths, Owens, Evans, Morgan, Davis, Williams, are everywhere, and run over into all the neighboring provinces. Half the tradesmen in Malvern are Welsh, or of Welsh descent. There are lots of them in Bristol and Liverpool. Driven back so many centuries ago by Saxons and Normans, these true Britons have been gaining on their conquerors for a long time, and bid fair to repossess the island. The Welsh Britons unite sturdiness and pluck with a hot and fiery temper. They are in most cases of a sanguine complexion and temperament, but not, therefore, fickle and unreliable. Easily moved they are also tenacious. They have what seem opposite qualities—fiery enthusiasm and longanimity.

RELIGIOUS BELIEF.

The Church of England never took hold of them. They are Methodists and Baptists. They mean that the Church shall be disestablished in Wales at any rate, whether it is in England or not. Why not in Wales, as well as in Ireland? It was the policy of the Government to extinguish the Welsh language—therefore the people have clung to it. The bishops and clergy appointed to Wales for a long period knew not a word of the language, and might as well have preached in Choctaw as in English. Of late, sermons and services in many parts are in Welsh, and especially the singing, and this has done something toward conciliating the people. I doubt, however, if the Anglican Church will ever be able to attach to itself more Welsh than Scotch or Irish. If people must lose their nationality, they will keep their religious independence. The Welsh will be Methodists and Baptists, the Scotch Presbyterians, the Irish Catholics for a long time to come, but who can tell me why they adopted such different religious systems? They were all Catholics three centuries ago—why have the Irish and a few Highlanders alone remained in the ancient faith?

EARL DUDLEY'S DOMAINS.

Leaving my newly-discovered Welsh watering-place for future investigation and delectation, let me transport you to a less salubrious locality through which you may pass en route in coming here from Mid-England. In one of my letters from Birmingham I gave an account of a visit to Dudley Castle, and the immense lime-stone quarries which extend for miles under its domain. I entered and partly explored it with the philosophers and philanthropists of a Social Science Congress. The castle, cavern and town of Dudley, and a great territory of coal and iron works, belong to Earl DUDLEY, and yield him a more than princely revenue. The sanitary investigations making everywhere in England to prepare for the expected cholera show the way in which the people live who earn the noble Earl's income. Dr. THORNE, one of the Medical Inspectors to the Privy Council, has been to Dudley. He found a town covered and almost concealed by black clouds of smoke; in a country covered with cinders and the débris of mines and furnaces; the houses and other buildings cracked, broken and in ruins; the open spaces dotted with stagnant pools; the canals and water-courses polluted; the streets undrained; everywhere filth and putrescence; nowhere light, or purity, or cleanliness; neither pure air to breathe, nor wholesome water to drink, nor cheerful prospect to see. In this hideous, pestiferous place Dr. THORNE found crowded dwellings, open cess-pools, houses and yards full of horrible odors. One house was visited in which six cases of typhus had occurred. There were two filthy bedrooms, in one of which ten persons slept on three separate heaps of shavings, each person having less than ninety cubic feet of air, and this must have been well saturated with the emanations from a heap of about three hundred cubic feet of refuse and excrement, which lay within five feet of the dwelling. Is it necessary to describe the physical appearance or moral character of people living in such conditions? Typhus is epidemic. The rate of infant mortality is double that of London. Houses were visited in which every inmate had been down with the typhus. And this is not the first time Dudley has been inspected. In 1858 a Government Inspector reported: "I am acquainted with no parallel to the case of Dudley, where, in a population of between thirty thousand and forty thousand persons, seven-tenths of the deaths for the last ten years have been in persons under the age of twenty years." This is not so sensational as a railway accident, but is it not really more dreadful? Lord DUDLEY is very rich. He owns Her Majesty's Theatre in London, and has kept it closed for years because no one will give him the rent he asks for it. He can give his ten or twenty thousand pounds for any religious or charitable object he may fancy. He thinks musical festivals desecrate Cathedrals, but he does not think of the horrible desecration of humanity going on among the people whose toil brings him his revenue. And Dudley is one of perhaps a hundred such towns in Mid-England, compared to which the rudest portions of this rough Wales are a paradise of beauty. Portions of South Wales, it must be allowed, are as black, and smoky and ugly as any Black country in England, and I should expect a town like Swansea, when the air is thick with the fumes of sulpher, copper and tin to be as unhealthy as it is ugly and disagreeable.

NEED OF REFORM.

The fear of cholera will do something for these places, but will they not by next year relapse into their habitual condition? Decidedly I agree with Mr. RUSKIN. Civilization, our phase of it, costs more than it comes to. Some millions five and die in this most horrible of slaveries that a few thousands of nicely-dressed people may sit by the salt sea waves here and there around the coast, and read volumes from Mudie's. It is not worth it. We had better all be decent savages. As a variation to drink and typhus, sixty-nine men have just been killed by an explosion in a Wigan colliery.

A RETURN TO THE STAGE.

Will you be surprised to hear that Mr. and Mrs. BOUCICAULT have decided to return to the stage? All who have ever seen them play together from their first appearance to this hour, will, I am sure, be delighted. Few cleverer men upon the stage and no sweeter woman. I have a Scottish friend who never went to a theatre half a dozen of times in his life, but I persuaded him to go and see the BOUCICAULTS in the "Colleen Bawn." "Well, how did you like my favorites?" I asked at our next meeting. "Oh, she is no actress at all," said he, "she is just a simple, nice, little body. Any pretty girl could do it as well." And that was all he knew about it. As to the motive for this resumption, I know nothing, only people who have no profession for which they are fitted, and which they must therefore enjoy, are very apt to return to it the first opportunity. There is no such lure as returning from business.

First Mortgage, Convertible,
7 Per Cent. Gold Bonds
OF THE
PEORIA & ROCK ISLAND RAILWAY
OF ILLINOIS.

First Mortgage Bonds - - - $1,500,000
Capital Stock - - - - - - - 2,000,000

This is a COMPLETED Road 91 miles in length, connecting the important Cities of Peoria on the Illinois River, and Rock Island, Moline and Davenport, on the Mississippi. Davenport, on the opposite bank of the river, is connected by a railway bridge. The last rail of this road was laid July 7, 1871, and the line is now open and being operated with a success exceeding all anticipations. In order to place upon the road the large equipment necessary for the business offered, and to construct depots, car and engine houses, machine shops, &c., equal to any of the best old roads in the country, as is now required of this, the Company offer, through the undersigned, $1,500,000 convertible first mortgage gold bonds, which cover the entire property of the Company, and is less than $17,000 per mile. PRESENT PRICE, 90, AND ACCRUED INTEREST IN CURRENCY. Principal and interest payable in gold at New-York or London, free of tax.

This road, opened for the humense local as well as through traffic, now offered, will prove one of the most profitable in the West, traversing as it does a section of country unsurpassed in fertility, of soil and agricultural resources, already thickly populated and in a high state of cultivation. This is self-evident from the fact that every section of the road passes through cultivated fields and many flourishing towns and villages, with a large city and navigable river at each end. Railroads in the West have been heretofore constructed through unsettled and uncultivated regions of the country, consequently have had but little local traffic to depend upon for several years after construction. But the Peoria and Rock Island Railway is a first class COMPLETED road, with NO PARALLEL or COMPETING LINE, and RUNS THROUGH ONE OF THE MOST AGRICULTURAL, MANUFACTURING AND MOST POPULOUS DISTRICTS IN THE WEST. Thus it is certain that the local business is already more than enough to sustain the road, while the through traffic is unlimited, as its connections are numerous, which can be seen by a glance at the map.

This road is a grand central line, to which many of the principal lines centralize and diverge to all parts of the continent.

We invite the attention of investors to this loan. Being familiar with the wealth and resources of the country along the line of this railway and A MEMBER OF OUR FIRM HAVING MADE A CAREFUL EXAMINATION OF THIS ROAD AND ITS PROPERTY, WE CAN WITH THE UTMOST CONFIDENCE RECOMMEND THE BONDS AS A PRIME SECURITY, reliable and safe in every particular.

All marketable securities received in exchange at full rates, and bonds delivered to all parts of the country, free of express charges.

Maps, circulars, &c., with full particulars relating to the road, furnished on application by the undersigned, Financial Agents of the Company.

$1,000,000

Connecticut Valley Railroad Company

BONDS!

Proposals will be received at the Connecticut River Banking Company, in Hartford, until 3 o'clock P. M. Saturday, Sept. 23, 1871, for the purchase of the whole or any part of

ONE MILLION DOLLARS

Of the First Mortgage Seven per Cent. Non-Taxable Bonds of the Connecticut Valley Railroad Company.

This is the whole issue, the first and only mortgage, and covers the entire property, equipment and franchises of the road.

The railroad has been built with cash subscriptions to the stock.

The Capital Stock is $1,250,000.

The amount paid in is $1,250,000, and the Bonds are issued for the complete and thorough equipment of the road.

These Bonds are payable thirty years from Jan. 1, 1871.

They are registered at the office of the Controller of the State of Connecticut, and are free from all taxes, State, municipal, and county.

They are in denominations of $1,000 each, with interest coupons attached, payable semi-annually, in January and July at the American Exchange National Bank, New-York, or at the Connecticut River Banking Company, Hartford, Conn.

They can be registered, if desired, and when registered, the coupons are payable to the order of the registered holder thereof.

The line of the road runs on the west bank of the Connecticut River, is forty-four miles in length, extending from Hartford to Saybrook on the Sound—touching all the important towns and villages on the route.

Regular freight and passenger trains are now in fifteen months from the beginning of work on the road, the daily receipts from which are nearly equal to the interest on the Mortgage Bonds.

Two additional passenger trains and also freight trains, will be in operation by Oct. 1, 1871, and it is affirmed that the Winter traffic will be large.

A certified check or currency, for ten per cent. of the bonds bid for, must be applied for must be inclosed with each application.

The accrued interest will be added to all accepted proposals, from July 1, 1871, until the final payment.

WILCOX & STILES, Trustees of the MORTGAGE TO THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY, until and including Oct. 10, 1871.

The sum advanced on proposals declined will be promptly returned.

Proposals may be addressed to

JOHN A. BUTLER,
Connecticut River Banking Company, Hartford, Conn., indorsed "Proposals for Bonds of the Connecticut Valley Railroad Company."

The right is reserved to decline all proposals which may be considered undesirable.

$150,000 NEW-JERSEY
INVESTMENT,
VINELAND RAILWAY BONDS.

$16,000 per mile, Seven per Cent. free of tax. Interest due April and October. Principal payable 1890.

The undersigned offers the unsold balance of the First and only Mortgage Bonds of the Vineland Railway Company, the entire Loan being $750,000.

The line begins at the terminus of the New-Jersey Southern Railroad, and extends to the Delaware River, is 47½ miles, and traverses the garden of New-Jersey—almost the entire length passing through a rich and cultivated country,—the products of which will be brought to Philadelphia and New-York by this line.

The flourishing towns of Vineland and Bridgeton are on the route.

On the opposite shore of the Delaware River the Smyrna Road is constructing, and will form a part of a through line to Baltimore.

Thirty-seven miles are now operated, and the remaining ten miles will be laid by Sept. 20.

The road-bed is not surpassed in the United States. Traffic constantly increasing.

The investment is secure beyond question. For a short time the price will be 88 and accrued interest.

SOUTH CAROLINA RAILROAD COMPANY
7 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.
Principal due 1st January, 1893, and coupons payable in New-York 1st January and 1st July.

These Bonds are secured by Mortgage in pursuance of a deed, executed on the 1st day of January, 1870, to Henry Gourdin, H. P. Walker and James M. Calder, are named trustees, being the only mortgage lien on the railway and rolling stock of the corporation, and are part of an issue of $2,000,000 of sterling bonds amounting to £419,500 sterling, being the equivalent in United States currency to about $2,100,000, and less than $18,000 per mile, the length of railway being 344 miles.

The gross receipts of the Company for 1870 amounted to $1,495,340 58; operating expenses and renewals $916,005 82, showing a profit of $583,344 71, or $535,244 71 in excess of the interest on the issue of 7 per cent. on $2,100,000 First Mortgage Bonds.

The South Carolina Railway is one of the earliest built railways in the United States; its affairs have ever been managed with care and integrity, and the present condition of the property is that of complete restoration. We recommend as investors its Mortgage Bonds, with the assurance of their being a first class security.

The above-described bonds are offered for sale by the undersigned at 97½ per cent.
